Introduction

In-depth studies of women's prisons in three states--Ohio, New York, and Tennessee--constitute one aspect of the investigation of Current Problems in the Women's Correctional System: Origins and Development. This code book is designed for use in the study of prisoner and sentence characteristics in those three states.

The source materials vary in extent and format, and they necessitate somewhat different sampling procedures for each state and prison. The materials and sampling procedures are described in the appendices.

Coding Conventions

The following coding conventions are used:

- 6's "none," "never," "no" (not for blanks but for positive indications that the convict has, e.g., no priors); and on Card 3, 6's indicate that the case was probably closed after the first release from prison
- 7's illegible or unintelligible
- 8's usually omitted—i.e., data are usually not given on this variable in this prisoner registry or part thereof
- 9's no information-i.e., data on this variable are usually given but are missing in this particular case.

Data Collection From Registries of Prisoners: Materials and Sampling Procedures

To supplement information on prisoners in official reports, data were collected directly from the prisoner registries of five institutions:

- (1) Tennessee State Penitentiary, Nashville
- (2) New York State Prison for Women at Auburn
- (3) New York Western House of Refuge at Albion
- (4) Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus
- (5) Ohio Reformatory for Women, Marysville.

Several considerations dictated selection of these institutions. First geographical diversity seemed desirable; thus one state was chosen from the South, one from the Northeast, and one from the Midwest. (The study originally was to use data collected by other researchers from California prisoner registries, but these materials were not computerized in time for inclusion.) Second, the plan called for comparison of the demographic, offense, and sentence characteristics of women held in custodial institutions and reformatories within the same state; both Ohio (which held female state prisoners at its penitentiary until opening of its reformatory) and New York (which simultaneously held women at the Auburn prison and Albion reformatory) provided this opportunity. (Tennessee, like most southern states, did not establish a women's reformatory.) Third, communication with archivists indicated that the prisoner registries for the five institutions in these three states were not only available but also in relatively good condition. (Unfortunately, examination of the records of the Ohio Reformatory for Women revealed that these documents were less rich in detail than those of the other institutions.)

Data collection procedures, including sampling methods, were influenced by a number of factors: the format of the materials (for example, whether female prisoners were listed together in ledgers or rather, as at the penitentiaries of Ohio and Tennessee, included in predominantly male listings, making it necessary to search for female names and other identifiers); the extent of the materials (the more female cases, the greater the need to use skip-intervals); and limitations on the coders' time. About fifteen days were allotted for data collection from the registries of each institution. The first two days were spent assessing the materials and coding some cases. Estimates were then made of the total number of female cases available and the amount of time it would take to locate and code a single case. Division of the first figure by the second gave an idea of how many cases could be covered in the remaining time. At that point, a decision was made whether to sample and how many cases to skip when sampling.

In some instances, constraints posed by materials, time, and research questions made it necessary to skip years as well as cases. Data were collected on female prisoners incarcerated for periods five years before and after the opening of new units or institutions for women, for the original plan (which proved partially infeasible) was to determine if the opening of a new unit or institution affected characteristics such as offense type and time served. (This original plan also explains the use of periods of unequal duration in tables and commentaries giving breakdowns by period of commitment.) It also seemed advisable to cover roughly the same periods for all prisons. Such considerations governed determination of years skipped when it was impossible to collect data on the entire sequence of female cases. Data collection stopped with cases received in 1934, a point about which two of the institutions closed and one that appeared to be a major dividing point in the development of the women's prison system. In the instance of the Ohio Reformatory for Women, however, an enthusiastic assistant continued coding cases received into 1943. Figure 1 illustrates the periods covered and sampling procedures.

TENNESSEE STATE PENITENTIARY

The primary source used for the study of female prisoners in Tennessee was the Tennessee State Archives' series of prisoner registries. These consist of volumes labeled K through T, plus a number of subsidiary volumes. Volumes U and following are held by the Department of Correction; use was made of volume U in addition to those in the archives.

The registries present a nearly unbroken series of consecutive admissions to the penitentiary, both female and male. There is some overlap among the earlier volumes, and the advent of a new clerk was sometimes accompanied by a new and idiosyncratic method of case enumeration. However, there was no change in the basic format, volume U recording data on the same variables, and in the same order, as did volume K. Thus the records are uniform as well as nearly complete.

during the following periods:

1879 through 1905 1912 through 1922 1929 through 1934.

That is, for Tennessee, years were skipped, but no cases were skipped within the sampling periods.

The Tennessee State Archives hold a rich variety of other materials that supplement the prisoner registrics. Particularly tantalizing were State Supreme Court case records that reveal the particulars of offenses listed merely as "larceny," "murder," and so on in the registries; some of these were used for Chapter 5.

NEW YORK STATE PRISON FOR WOMEN AT AUBURN

The New York State Archives include in their holdings a number of volumes relating to the State Prison for Women operated at Auburn between 1893 and 1933. Of these, the most useful were the following:

- Register of Convicts Received between May 1893 and March 1918
- Register of Convicts Received between August 1928 and June 1933
- Register of Convicts Discharged between June 1893 and December 1919
- Bertillon Register on inmates admitted from July 1909 until the prison's closing in 1933
- Commutation Ledger covering October 1920 to April 1930.

These volumes were used, sometimes simultaneously, to piece together records of prisoners included in the sample.

Information was collected on a total of 669 cases. Every case received from May to December 1893 was covered; these first cases included women convicted earlier but held in county penitentiaries until the opening of the State Prison for Women made possible their transfer to a state institution. Because they apparently do not appear in any other state data source, it seemed advisable to collect as much information as possible on these convicts. Beginning with January 1, 1894, the sample included every other admission (odd numbers). In all, the following periods were covered:

893	through	1903
912	through	1922
926	through	1933.

Special samples were taken from the Bertillon register for specifics on some property and all homicide cases.

NEW YORK WESTERN HOUSE OF REFUGE AT ALBION

The New York State Archives hold seven volumes of prisoner registries of the Albion reformatory, covering the period from January 1894 (when the first inmate was received) through June of 1931 (when the institution ceased ; to function as a reformatory). These records are complete, highly detailed, and in excellent condition.

Data were collected on a total of 1,583 cases, using every other case (odd numbers) received. Owing to student assistance with coding, in the case of Albion it was possible to cover every year.

In addition to the prisoner registries, the archives hold an evidently complete set of case files on Albion's inmates—167 cubic feet of them, each in a folder tied with a bright pink ribbon. These case files, which include letters from and to inmates (the prison's administration exercised tight control over correspondence), photographs, test scores, and other documents, provide an extremely rich source of information on reformatory inmates and their reactions to institutional efforts to rehabilitate them. Although it was not possible to examine these case files systematically, when time allowed reference was made to some of unusual interest.

OHIO PENITENTIARY

The Ohio State Archives hold an excellent series of registries on prisoners (male and female) admitted to the Ohio penitentiary. There are twenty-one volumes in this series, covering admissions from 1834 through March 1900. Each volume is indexed, but it proved easier to identify female cases by looking for the "W" with which they were tagged in the registries themselves. In addition to this series, the archives hold a volume, clearly a copy of an earlier and now-lost registry, which records details on prisoners received from 1815 to 1834; this was used along with the series of registries. Registries for cases received after May 1900 (volumes 22 onward) are held by the Ohio penitentiary: these were used to pick up where the archives' series leaves off.

Information was collected on a total of 609 cases, using every female case admitted from 1888 through 1916 (after which women were no longer received at the penitentiary unless slated for execution) except for cases admitted from May 1910 through December 1911. This interval was skipped owing to unexpected lack of time; the original calculation of the probable number of females committed to the Ohio penitentiary proved to be an underestimation.

OHIO REFORMATORY FOR WOMEN AT MARYSVILLE

The Ohio State Archives also hold a two-volume set of registries for prisoners admitted to the reformatory at Marysville. The first prisoner committed directly to the reformatory was received on September 1, 1916. However, the reformatory also received, at first, transfers from the Ohio "penitentiary (women committed as early as 1913), and data on these women are recorded in the first volume of the Marysville registries. The first registry
