PRISON CROWDING AND FORCED RELEASES IN ILLINOIS, 1979-1982 (ICPSR 8921)

SUMMARY: These data were collected in the Illinois prison system where, in response to a prison overcrowding crisis, approximately two-thirds of the inmates released by the Illinois Department of Corrections (IDOC) were discharged prior to serving their expected sentence. This study was designed to evaluate the effects of an early release program on prisoners, prison populations, offense rates, local criminal justice systems, and the general public. The files contain extensive Federal Bureau of Investigation arrest history information and other personal and social indicators describing inmates released from the state prison system. Data are available for three comparison groups: (1) a sample of prisoners who served their regular sentences prior to the "forced release" program, (2) a group that served regular sentences after implementation of the program, and (3) a group of inmates who were released early under the program (i.e., before serving their full sentences). The "inmate jacket file," which is the comprehensive institutional file maintained for all inmates, contains variables for each inmate on social and personal characteristics, criminal history, risk scales, court decisions for each offense, institutional conduct, prior release and return records, method of release, condition of supervision, and parole violation records. The arrest file includes variables which describe the type and number of charges at arrest, case disposition of each charge, probation length, incarceration length, admission and release dates, and release type. The unit of observation for Part I, the Inmate Jacket File, is the individual inmate, while the unit of observation for the Arrest Rap Sheet file is the arrest. CLASS IV

UNIVERSE: Inmates released from Illinois prisons between July 1979 and December 1982.

SAMPLING: Inmates released one year prior to the start-up of the early release program (June 1980) and for 30 months thereafter. A total of 1,600 inmates were randomly selected from the IDOC automatic information system's records of inmates released between July 1979 and December 1982. Of these, inmate jackets were located for 1,557 cases and arrest history information was available for 1,430 of the cases. Of the 1,557 inmates included in the study, 355 were released prior to June 1, 1980. The remaining 1,202 inmates were released during the operation of the program. Not all of these were early releases. Some inmates served their normal expected sentence.

RESTRICTIONS: The data contain names of inmates. Potential users of the data must contact ICPSR in writing, detailing proposed use of the data.

Purpose of the Study

Between July 1980 and December 1983 in response to a prison crowding crisis, approximately two-thirds of the inmates released by the Illinois Department of Correction (IDOC) were discharged prior to serving their expected sentence. This study was designed to evaluate the effects of this early release program on prisoners, prison populations, offense rates, local criminal justice systems and the general public.

Methodology

Sources of information:

Data were drawn primarily from the inmate's institutional "jacket" and the FBI arrest rap sheet records routinely collected and maintained by local court, correctional, and law enforcement agencies.

Sample:

The sample consists of inmates released one year prior to the start-up of the early release program (June 1980) and for 30 months thereafter. A total of 1600 inmates were randomly selected from the IDOC automatic information system's records of inmates released between July 1979 and December 1982. Of these, inmate jackets were located for 1557 cases and arrest history information was available for 1430 of the cases. Of the 1557 inmates included in the study, 355 were released prior to June 1, 1980. The remaining 1202 inmates were released during the operation of the program. Not all of these were early releasees; some served their normal expected sentence.

Dates of data collection:

Circa 1983

Summary of Contents

Special characteristics of the study:

The files contain extensive FBI arrest history information and other personal and social indicators of inmates released from a state prison system. These data are available for three comparison groups: a sample of prisoners who served their regular sentences prior to the "forced release" program; a group that served regular sentences after the implementation of the program; and a group of inmates who were released early under the program (i.e., before serving their full sentences).

Description of variables:

The inmate jacket file contains 94 variables for each inmate on social and personal characteristics, criminal history, risk scales, court decisions for each offense, institutional conduct, prior release and return records, method of release, condition of supervision and parole violation records. The arrest file includes 22 variables file which describes the type and number of charges at arrest, case disposition of each charge, probation length, incarceration length, admission and release dates and release type.

Unit of observation:

Inmates in the releasee file; arrests in the arrest-level file.

CODEBOOK RULES

1. Follow the rules of the codebook.
2. ALWAYS use a pencil when coding.
3. If you are uncertain about how to code, check with a fellow coder, Nola, or call Jim Austin at (415) 956-5651.
4. Slash all zero codes: "Ø" not "0".
5. Right justify all dates and multi-column codes.
For example:

DISPOSITION DATE	42-47	Specify the month, day, and year of the date of disposition for arrest #1.
PROBATION LENGTH	48-49 (minimum) 50-51 (maximum)	If the disposition of arrest #1 included probation, please indicate the length of probation in months. If there is a combination of imprisonment/probation, record probation only.

ARREST INFORMATION

VARIABLE	FIELD	OPERATIONAL DEFINITION	SOURCE
INCARCERATION LENGTH	52-57	Code the length of incarceration to be served from the sentence in MONTHS. For example: 10 Months: <table><tr><td>0</td><td>1</td><td>0</td></tr></table> <table><tr><td>0</td><td>1</td><td>0</td></tr></table> 2 to 3 Years: <table><tr><td>0</td><td>2</td><td>4</td></tr></table> <table><tr><td>0</td><td>3</td><td>6</td></tr></table> If less than one month, code: <table><tr><td>0</td><td>0</td><td>1</td></tr></table> <table><tr><td>0</td><td>0</td><td>1</td></tr></table> Use the disposition date as the admission date, then calculate the release date based on the sentence. If the length of incarceration is over one month, then round off the nearest whole month based on 0 to 14, and 15 to 31 day periods. If probation/imprisonment, probation is only recorded. Periodic imprisonment length is not recorded. If multiple changes are listed with varying sentence lengths, the highest sentence is entered, and other sentences are written on the lines provided before disposition.	0	1	0	0	1	0	0	2	4	0	3	6	0	0	1	0	0	1
