INTRODUCTION

The Nature of Juvenile Court Career Data Files

The National Juvenile Court Data Archive collects automated court records and aggregates them, when appropriate, into two data structures. The first, calendar year data files, contains the records of all cases disposed during the twelve month period. The second, the birth cohort data files, contains all of the court records on any youth ever referred to the court who was born in a specific year. For example, the Utah 1962 birth cohort data file contains records of all referrals of every youth born in 1962. These records involved cases referred between 1969 and 1980 (when youth born in 1962 turned 18 years of age and were defined by statute as adults). Birth cohort data files are constructed only after all the juvenile court activity of the cohort has ceased, generally after the cohort has 'aged out' of the juvenile justice system. Many information systems that have been in operation for only a few years are able to generate calendar year data files, but they are unable to provide the information to the Archive that is needed to support the development of a birth cohort file. Birth cohort data files require the information system to contain records dating from the time the cohort was at risk of referral to juvenile court until this group ended its potential involvement with the juvenile court system.

History of the Utah Juvenile Court Information System

In 1968 the Utah Juvenile Court established one of the first statewide juvenile court information systems. This batch data entry system collected information at disposition on all cases handled by the court. An on-line, management information system was installed statewide in 1973 and all data collected in the batch system were backloaded.

Data Collection Methods

The automated information system is an on-line case tracking system designed to capture data contemporaneously with the event. The system is designed to serve the operational needs of the court. The system collects information on each youth and offense referred to court intake and tracks the progress of the case through court disposition and monitors post-dispositional activities. From this information the court staff are able to monitor the activity of each case and to review a youth's past contacts with the court through on-line inquiry. The system also performs many of the routine tasks of the court, such as preparing petitions, developing court calendars, tracking probation officer caseloads, preparing police feedback reports and other standard reports required by cooperating agencies. The information system is an integral part of the juvenile court and staff have learned to depend on the accuracy and timeliness of the information it contains.

The system has a number of built-in validity check procedures to insure that codes used are valid, dates entered are reasonable, and that data entered are consistent with prior information on the case. The system routinely reviews the data stored on each case to determine if some information that should have been entered by a certain date are missing and produces exception reports identifying the oversights. In addition to the internal review mechanisms, case information is reviewed frequently by court staff involved with the case and the system produces numerous reports which together insure that the data maintained by the system are both accurate and up-to-date.

Publications

The Utah State Juvenile Court publishes an annual report which contains summaries of juvenile court cases based on the data collected by the Juvenile Court information system.

Archived Data Files

The on-line information system was upgraded in August of 1982. During the conversion, records of all youth who were 19 years of age and older were archived in the original data coding structure, while all other records were transformed into the new coding structure. The Archive received a complete copy of all archived and active records from the Utah system in 1984 and annually receives a copy of all active records prior to the court's archiving of outdated records.

The record structure of Utah's juvenile court information system includes two record types which are the source of the information stored in the Archive. The first is a demographic record for each youth which includes a unique child identification number, date of birth, sex, county of residence, race, and other sociological characteristics of the youth. The second is an incident record which describes the nature of each offense referred to court intake and the court's response to this incident. The incident record includes the unique child identification number, the date of intake, the source of referral, the offense charged, an offense severity ranking, the intake decision, the date of intake decision, the date of petition (if any), the date of the formal court disposition (if any), and the court's formal disposition of the charge (if any).

The Utah data files stored in the Archive are the product of an automated restructuring of a youth's demographic and incident records. The restructuring program, which was designed and written by Archive staff, abstracted data from a youth's set of demographic and incident records to create a set of fixed format case records. The Archive defines case as a youth processed by the court on a new referral regardless of the number of charges contained in the referral. Therefore, the court's processing of a youth charged with three burglaries in a single referral would be represented by one case record, while the court processing a youth referred to court intake for one burglary and referred for another the following week would be found in two separate case records.

The logic of the restructuring program is as follows. The program isolates a youth's demographic records and all related incident records, using the unique child identification number as a key. The incident records are then sorted by intake date. During the sorting process any incident record with a severity code which classifies the 'offense' as an administrative action, a review proceeding or any court activity not related to a law-violation or an abuse/neglect matter (e.g., permission to marry) is deleted. All remaining incidence records with a common intake date are grouped for combination into a single case record. (Approximately 80 percent of all archived Utah case records are based on a single incident record.)

The first part of the archived case record contains demographic information on the youth. This information (i.e., unique child identification number, date of birth, sex, county of residence and race) is copied directly from the demographic record and is common to all case records involving the same youth.

A second part of the record describes offense(s) referred, the source of referral and the court's processing of the case. This set of information is the result of the application of a series of decision rules. The archived record captures the three most serious offenses referred in the case. The decision rule used to select the most serious offense uses the offense severity rankings found on each incident record. All incident records in the case (i.e., with the same date of intake) are sorted by their offense severity rankings. The three most serious offenses and their severity rankings are copied in order onto the archived case record. Over 95 percent of all cases involve less than four incident records; therefore, by capturing three offenses, the vast majority of the offense information on the incident records is stored on the archived case record. If a case has less than three incident records, the related fields on the archived record are left blank.

The processing of a case can follow one of two general paths. Some cases are handled informally by court intake and a disposition is determined without any formal court involvement. In other cases, court intake decides that the matter should be formally adjudicated (judged) by the court. In such cases a petition is filed requesting an adjudicatory or waiver hearing and a hearing is held before a judge. The variable "most severe decision at intake" indicates if any of the incident records contained an intake decision showing that the matter was petitioned to court for formal processing. That is, the intake decision coded on the incident record in a case was reviewed and flagged as indicating petitioned or nonpetitioned handling. If any are classified as petitioned the case variable "most severe decision at intake" was coded as petitioned, otherwise the case was classified as a nonpetitioned case. The offense on the incidence record which provided the data for the most severe decision at intake was coded into the field labelled "most serious offense with the most severe intake decision." If two or more incident records shared the same intake decision (which often happens), the offenses on these incident records were sorted by their severity rankings and the most serious was copied onto the archived case record.

Offenses which are processed without the filing of petition have no date of petition on their incident records. If none of the incident records in a case have a date of petition, the date of petition filed on the archived case record is a field of zeros. However, if one or more of the incident records have a date of petition, the earliest chronological date was copied onto the archived case record to represent the date of petition of the case.

The most severe dispositions were determined by an ordered set of decision rules. Severity rankings for the set of possible intake decisions and the set of possible formal court dispositions were developed by archive staff. These rankings are found in Appendix I. If the case was handled informally without the filing of a petition, the set of intake decisions found on the incident records were sorted and the three most severe copied into the corresponding disposition fields on the archived case record. If the case was petitioned and formally processed, the court dispositions on only those incident records reflecting formal processing were sorted by severity and the three most severe placed in the corresponding disposition fields on the archived case record. Therefore, the intake dispositions on nonpetitioned incident records were ignored in determining the most severe disposition of the case when any of the incident records indicated that an offense was formally processed.

The date of case disposition depended on the nature of the intake decision. If the case was handled informally, the date of the intake decision was used. If the case was petitioned and formally processed, the date of the court disposition was coded onto the archived case record.

Most of the other decision rules that apply to the court processing component of the archived case record can be inferred by applying the logic represented in the above examples and carefully reading the variable labels found in the latter part of this user's guide.

The final component of the archived case record summarizes three aspects of the youth's prior court involvement: age of onset, number of prior delinquency and status offense cases, and number of prior dependency, abuse or neglect referrals. These variables are added to each case record after the demographic and offense/court processing components of all of the youth's case records have been constructed. The nearly complete case records are sorted by intake date from the earliest to the most recent. Age of onset is the age of the youth when he or she was first referred to court intake for a delinquency or status offense. To determine this value the sorted case records are scanned in chronological order to determine the first occurrence of a delinquency or status offense charge. Once the record is identified, the age of the youth at referral in this case is calculated by subtracting the date of birth from the date of intake. The resulting age of onset is copied onto each case record. Number of prior delinquency and status offense cases and number of prior dependency, abuse or neglect referrals were determined by counting the number of such case types that chronologically precede each of the sorted case records. These counts are sequentially entered onto each case record.

Each archived data file contains a complete set of the delinquency, status offense, abuse and neglect case records of all youth ever referred to court intake who were born in the same year. All the records on a single youth are grouped together on the file and are chronologically ordered by referral date. The number of youth and the number of case records in each birth cohort data file are:

Year	Youth	Records

Terms of Availability

Each request to use these data should be directed to the Archive. The Archive will contact Utah's State Juvenile Court regarding their release. Upon the Court's authorization to release and disseminate the data, the data files will be supplied to the requestor by the Archive with any necessary cautions or restrictions.

The Archive provides the data on magnetic tapes AS IS and shall not be held responsible for any liability incurred as a result of any error or omission in the data as it appears on the magnetic tapes. However, should any inconsistencies be found, the Archive asks to be notified so that corrections can be made to the data.

All questions and requests should be addressed to:

Summary tabulations on selected variables (manner of handling and sex breakdowns for delinquency and dependency cases for each county in Utah) are publicly available beginning with 1982 data through the Inter-university Consortium for Political and Social Research at the University of Michigan, P.O. Box 1248, Ann Arbor, Michigan. 48106.

USING THE CODEBOOK

The information that follows is based on a study of available documentation from the data supplier, interviews with the data supplier and court personnel, and diagnostic analyses performed by the Archive staff. The example below is a reproduction of information appearing in the codebook for a typical variable. The numbers in brackets do not appear in the codebook, but are references to the descriptions which follow this example.

Column/ Width	Variable Number	Code Value and Description
[1] 33/5	[2] UT015	[3] MOST SERIOUS OFFENSE REFERRED [alpha/numeric field]
		[4] The most serious offense charged at the time of referral to court intake.
		[5] [6]
		(00000) Non offense
		(01004) Negligent homicide
		(01202) Attempted extortion
		(WEPUU) Unlawful use of weapons
		(WW2WS) Driving on wrong side of road
		(WW3WI) Wrong way on rotary intersection
		(YCWAR) Youth corrections warrant
		(ZZZZZ) Offense unknown
	[7]	(99999) Missing
	[8]	NOTE: During the 1982 conversion a new alpha/numeric coding structure was introduced. Old codes that were still viable were recoded into the new formats, while some old codes with no new counterparts (e.g., offense codes for laws that had been repealed or found unconstitutional) were retained. These are the numeric codes.

- [1] The starting location and width of the variable in the machine-readable data file. This is the format information needed to read the data into other systems.
- [2] The variable number. The variable number is used as a variable name when the file is processed by systems which use alphabetic variable names (e.g. SPSS).
- [3] The variable label used by statistical systems to identify the variable or program output.
- [4] A description of the variable contents.
- [5] The code values occurring in the data for the variable.

- [6] The textual definitions of the codes. The first 20 characters form a short value label which some systems use to document the output of analysis programs. A longer description follows the short label when necessary.
- [7] The designation of missing data. The Archive staff has replaced any out-of-bounds codes with missing data codes. Many analysis packages require that certain types of data which are usually excluded from analysis be designated as "missing data". Fields with no entry were left blank and "() No entry" is listed as a code value. Some variables also have response options representing "unknown" which are also listed as code values.
- [8] An explanatory/cautionary note.

NOTE: During the 1982 conversion a new alpha/numeric coding structure was introduced. Old codes that were still viable were recoded into the new formats, while some old codes with no new counterparts (e.g., offense codes for laws that had been repealed or found unconstitutional) were retained. These are the numeric codes.
