INTRODUCTION

When he unveiled the Illinois State Police's Automated Fingerprint Identification System (AFIS) in 1989, Governor James R. Thompson called AFIS "one of the most revolutionary achievements in law enforcement and crime detection in my life as a prosecutor, a criminal justice teacher, and a governor." But to realize the vast promise of this technology, both current and potential AFIS users need to exchange information, experience, and ideas with one another. The Illinois Criminal Justice Information Authority has created this AFIS Reference Guide to promote the sharing of information about AFIS in Illinois, throughout the country and in Canada.

The AFIS Reference Guide is a comprehensive listing of Automated Fingerprint Identification Systems (AFIS) in the United States and Canada. As of 1989, approximately one-half of the states were operating, or were in the process of implementing, criminal justice AFIS systems. In addition, at that time, virtually every non-AFIS state was in various stages of planning for, or implementing AFIS.¹ As of June 1990, the Authority had identified 68 databases throughout the United States and Canada and 164 user sites (see the definitions following). With the growing number of AFIS users and the growing interest in this technological breakthrough, this guide is a timely effort to promote information sharing among AFIS agencies regardless of vendor, and among states that are in different stages of implementing the technology.

The AFIS Reference Guide was compiled with the assistance of many sources. Listings of current users were acquired from the various vendors, user groups and other private organizations. Basic agency information was collected through telephone interviews with the AFIS contacts for each site. It should be noted that any guide of this type is only comprehensive at the time of publication, and the Authority realizes that changes and additions may have occurred.

¹ Legal and Policy Issues Relating to Biometric Identification Technologies, 1989, Sacramento, California, SEARCH Group, Inc.

The AFIS Reference Guide is organized by state, country, or network and by vendor. The first section is in alphabetical order by state, country, or network. Within each portion of this section, sites are arranged by central site, with their user sites indented directly below. It should be noted that some shared systems, a system in which two or more agencies share a database, are also user sites to central sites. They have been listed as user sites, but it is indicated that they are also shared systems. The vendor section is arranged by AFIS vendor, with the users of that vendor listed alphabetically (there are some technical exceptions for shared systems). It should also be noted that none of the site categories is mutually exclusive: for example, a site that is a user site to a central site may also have its own database; therefore, it is listed as a user site/central site.

At present, different AFIS systems do not communicate effectively with one another. Few standards exist for implementing AFIS systems and for sharing data across systems. In the future, a much broader AFIS capability will be desired. The goal of the AFIS Reference Guide, through increased information sharing, is to assist in the development of better systems in the future. There are at least five policy issues that should be kept in mind as agencies consider implementing or expanding AFIS systems:

- o System Compatibility -- the ability of AFIS systems to be interfaced and networked is critical to improving law enforcement's crime-solving capabilities.
- o Local Agency Access to AFIS Systems -- for many local law enforcement agencies, the cost of acquiring an AFIS system is prohibitive. For them, the only real opportunity to take part in the technology is by accessing existing systems through remote terminals.
- o Better Integration of AFIS with Computerized Criminal History Systems -- until local agencies are given remote access to AFIS systems, and until those AFIS systems are more closely integrated with computerized criminal history systems, the true potential of AFIS will not be realized.

- o Access to AFIS by Non-Criminal Justice Agencies -- in the future, the fastest growing use of AFIS will most likely be to support the increasing number of background checks for job applicants or people seeking licenses in fields not directly related to criminal justice.
- o Ongoing Research and Evaluation of AFIS -- the impact of AFIS on law enforcement and the entire criminal justice system is not yet adequately understood. Long-term research to evaluate AFIS's impact should be initiated nationwide.

While this guide does not by itself solve any of the problems listed here, it will help users gain insight into AFIS through contact with other users, which in turn will aid agencies in developing more effective long-range AFIS policies. It will also promote collaboration among AFIS users and prospective users. As a follow-up to the guide, the Authority is currently working with the University of Illinois at Chicago's Forensic Science Program on an AFIS impact study on selected sites across the United States.

The Authority would also like to thank all those agencies and vendors listed in the guide for their participation and cooperation with this project.

DEFINITIONS

For the purposes of this guide, the following terms have been used to describe what type of system an agency possesses. These terms are generic and should be thought of in a broad sense.

AFIS: Automated Fingerprint Identification System.

CAL-ID: A statewide, multi-database system in California with extensive Remote Access Network which allows local law enforcement agencies to have varying levels of access for ten-print and latent print identification purposes. For the purposes of this guide, the sections pertaining to California are simplified. It should be noted that all AFIS users in California have access to the California Department of Justice's database in Sacramento; therefore, all agencies using AFIS in California could be termed user sites to the DOJ.

CENTRAL SITE: Where the AFIS database is physically located.

ISS: Vendor. Identification and Security Systems, Inc., Pine West Five, Albany, New York 12205.

MORPHO: Vendor. North American Morpho Systems, Inc., 1551 Broadway, Tacoma, Washington 98402, (206)383-3617.

NEC: Vendor. NEC Information Systems, Inc., 1712 New Hampshire Avenue, N.W., Washington D.C. 20009, (202)483-0576

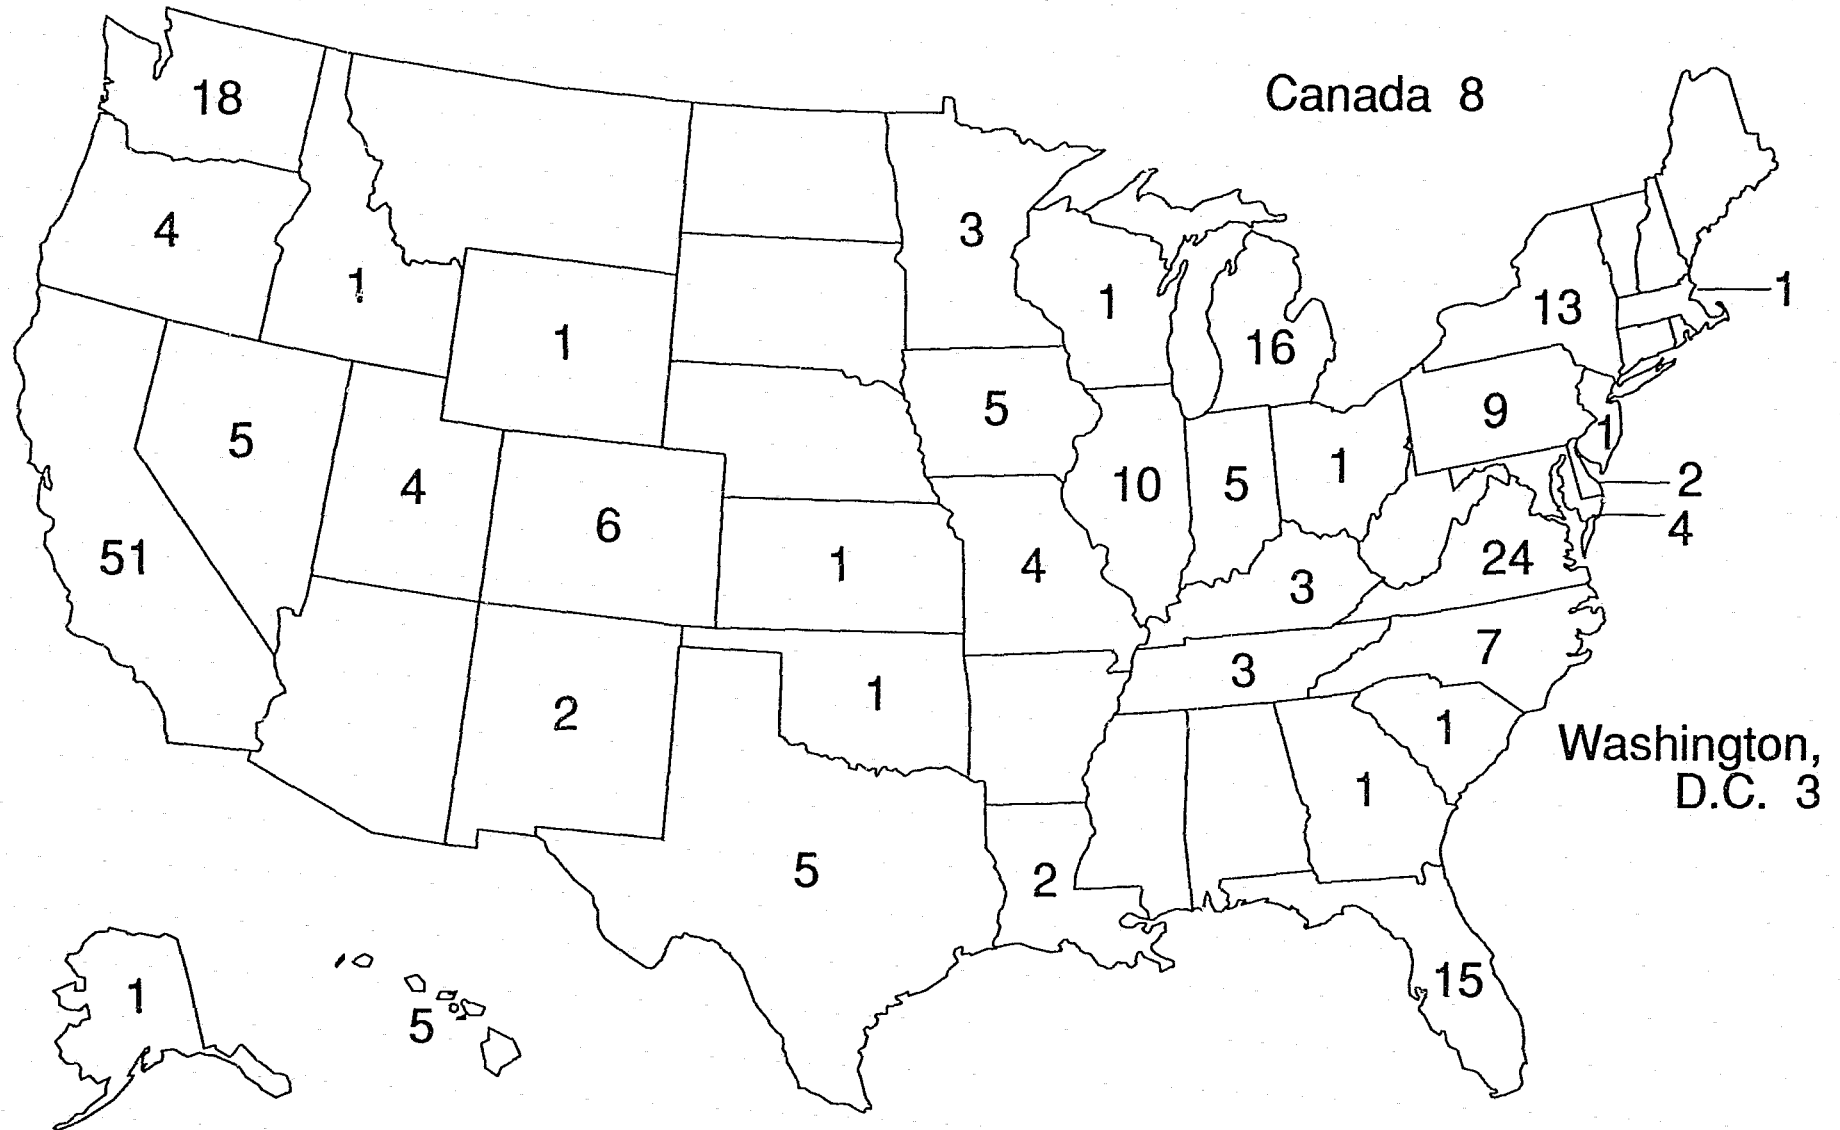

PRINTRAK: Vendor. De La Rue Printrak, Inc., 1250 North Tustin Avenue, Anaheim, California 92807, (714)666-2700.

PROCUREMENT: Any agency whose system was not fully operational at the time of the telephone interviews is listed as being in the procurement phase.

SHARED SYSTEM: A system in which two or more agencies share the same database. The database is located at one of the agencies, or the agencies have a shared work space where the database is located. These sharing agencies have the same capabilities, and the database includes fingerprint cards from all of the agencies.

WIN: Western Identification Network. A non-profit corporation formed specifically to facilitate the creation of a multi-state AFIS system. The WIN host computer system is located in Sacramento, California. Remote subsystems have been installed in Idaho, Nevada, Oregon (2), Utah, and Wyoming. Booking terminals have also been installed in nine locations throughout the same states. In July 1990, Alaska, California and Washington state were also connected to WIN.
