FOREWORD

To ensure the earliest possible release of annual data to criminal justice agency administrators, the Bureau of Criminal Statistics presents its statistical information in two separate types of reports.

The first report is made up of standardized reference material. Jurisdictional detail shown in this report provides the management information needed by local contributors. This reference report describes crimes and arrests in California. Other Bureau reference reports address superior court prosecutions, adult and juvenile probation, adult criminal detentions, drug arrests and dispositions and other subjects.

The second report is an annual presentation of crime and delinquency in the state. Data in this publication provide less jurisdictional detail and emphasizes trends in offenses and procedural activities in the different sets of agencies administering criminal justice in the state. This annual presentation, "Crime and Delinquency in California," will be released in August, 1973.

Figures in this early report are preliminary and may be subject to slight changes in the final analytical report.

INTRODUCTION

Information shown in these jurisdiction reference tables make up an annual compilation of crimes known to the police and arrests made by policing agencies in California. This information is reported monthly to the Bureau of Criminal Statistics by police and sheriffs' departments.

In 1972, serious crime (seven major offense groups) reported to the Bureau was 99 percent complete. Seventeen police departments and three sheriffs' offices failed to complete a full twelve months of crime and arrest reporting, which accounts for the missing 1 percent. Crime figures gathered under a summary accounting system do not state the crime problem with exactness. Thus, the data are not precise measures; they are only indicators of the nature and extent of serious crimes in California.

A major change in the system used to report arrests to the Bureau was made in 1972. One hundred and seventy-six of the policing agencies in the state reported or started reporting line-item arrests to the Bureau on the Monthly Arrest and Citation Register and two larger agencies submitted arrests on a computer tape in the Register format. This type of reporting gives individual characteristics of persons arrested that the summary system does not provide. It is a more accurate accounting system and helps eliminate duplicate arrests. This modification of the arrest reporting system contributes to the reduced rates of adult and juvenile arrests.

MAJOR CRIMES - SEVEN OFFENSE GROUPS

TABLES 1-A AND 1-B

There were 723,936 serious crimes (seven major offense groups) reported to California policing agencies in 1972, a crime rate of 3527.3 per 100,000 population, which is not appreciably different from the 1971 rate.

The four crimes of personal violence (willful homicide, robbery, aggravated assault and forcible rape) represent 15 percent of the seven major offenses and showed a 4.6 percent rate rise in 1972 over 1971. Within this group, forcible rape had the largest rate increase over the prior year, a 10.3 percent growth.

Property crime rates were down 0.8 percent in 1972. Compared to 1971, this was the first decline in property offenses in ten years, even though burglary, which accounts for 55 percent of the seven major offenses, had a slight rate increase. Felony theft (over $200 in value) and auto theft both showed decreases. This accounted for the decrease in crimes against property.

Table 1-B shows crime rate comparisons for two years for each of California's ten counties with over 500,000 population and the remaining 48 counties grouped. Consistent with the statewide leveling off in the total number of serious crimes reported to the police in 1972, five of the ten larger counties, however, showed rate decreases over 1971. San Diego County had a 10.4 percent rate increase, the greatest growth in the state. This was due to a rise in all offense categories except homicide, which declined. San Francisco County had the largest rate decrease, 17 percent; of the seven major categories, only forcible rape was up slightly in rate.

ADULT FELONY ARRESTS

TABLES 2-A AND 2-B

There were 240,231 adult felony arrests reported to the Bureau in 1972, a rate of 1170.5 arrests per 100,000 population for an increase of 3.4 percent over the prior year.

Arrests for heroin and other narcotics charges continued a steady three-year rise; dangerous drug arrests had the only decline in the drug group for the two years.

Only three of the ten largest counties in the state showed reduced adult felony arrest rates in 1972. The seven other counties and the balance of state all had increases.

ADULT MISDEMEANOR ARRESTS

TABLES 3-A AND 3-B

Statewide adult misdemeanor arrests declined 0.1 percent in rate in 1972. Reduction in arrests for petty theft, drug law violations and nonsupport all contributed to the overall decline. The adult misdemeanor drunk arrest rate fell off 10.7 percent in 1972 compared to 1971; much of this drop can be attributed to persons being diverted into detoxification programs following imposition of a new statute, Section 647ff of the Penal Code. This code change allows persons previously arrested for drunkenness to be handled as noncriminals through a variety of treatment programs.

Except for a rather large increase in drunk driving and assault and battery arrests, there would have been an even greater decrease in misdemeanor arrests. Arrests for drunk driving offenses increased in 1972. Some of this may be due to expanded state and local enforcement programs aimed at drunken drivers. Arrest rates for misdemeanor assault and battery increased over the prior year and followed the trend noted in arrests made for the violent crimes of felony assault and homicide.

In 1972, five of the ten most heavily populated counties and the combined total of the remaining 48 counties had rate decreases in adult misdemeanor arrests. The other five counties had rate increases. San Mateo County showed the greatest rise in number of misdemeanor arrests. Three other Bay Area counties had the largest decreases in misdemeanor arrest rates: San Francisco, 9.0 percent; Santa Clara, 8.0 percent and Alameda, 7.6 percent.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY ARRESTS

TABLES 4-A AND 4-B

Juvenile arrests decreased 8.1 percent by rate in 1972, the third straight year where both the number of arrests and rate per 100,000 population declined. There was a sharp rise in arrests for crimes of personal violence: homicide, robbery, assault and forcible rape. Although small in number, these arrests are consistent with the rise in adult arrests for crimes of violence. The greatest rate reductions were in the dangerous drugs and hit and run offense arrests. Delinquent tendency arrests, which account for 53 percent of all juveniles arrested, dropped 11.8 percent by rate when comparing 1972 to 1971.

All of the ten largest counties, except Sacramento, had decreased juvenile arrests. Policing agencies in the balance of the state group had a rate decrease of over 5 percent.^a Different interpretations of the court decisions dealing with recording juvenile arrests caused some policing agencies to modify their methods of handling juveniles.

^aThe apparent decline in total juvenile arrests for San Francisco County was the result of a computer program that failed to include juveniles arrested whose dispositions were "handled in the department." It was not possible to rectify the error prior to publication. It emphasizes the need to treat each county as an independent structure for annual comparisons.
