This publication summarizes the movement of offender populations under " the supervision of the Wisconsin Division of Corrections for calendar year 1975. Appendix tables contain aggregated information on correctional clients confined in state institutions and on clients receiving state supervision while living in their home communities. Types of information included are as follows: beginning of the year counts, end of the year counts, average populations, admissions during the year, and releases during the year. Included in the narrative are five-year trend tables for primary offender groups.

In 1975 the Division's total population, in institutions and receiving supervision in communities, for the first time exceeded 20,000 cases. By the end of the year the Division was responsible for supervision of 22,457 clients. During 1975 adult populations increased, while juvenile an anlations remained at about the 1974 level.

To be noted in the narrative tables is the continued upward trend in the probation and parole populations. It is also of note that institution populations, having decreased for three years, showed large increases in both 1974 and 1975. Population pressures in the adult institutions can be anticipated in the next few years. Examination of the series of tables that follow show that most of the gain in community supervision populations has been due to the growth of the adult male probation program. One factor explaining this growth is the gradual state absorption during 1972, 1973, and 1974 of all Milwaukee County adult probation cases from the previously county-administered program. Another factor which affects all five-year trend tables was the change in the age of majority from 21 to 18 which occurred in late 1972.

*Note: This bulletin is the companion publication to the C-60A which reports the same information on a fiscal year basis.

Table A shows the combined average daily population for community supervision and institutions for calendar years 1971 through 1975, with year-to-year percentage changes. The average total population grew every year during the five-year period. During recent years the growth rate has been particularly high. However, the 1975 increase was down 5.3 percentage points from 1974.

1974	18,149	+19.7
1975	20,766	+14.4

Note: Includes community supervision cases supervised in other states and cases from other states supervised in Wisconsin.

Table B shows the average daily population and annual percentage changes in average population of offenders supervised in the community by the Division's Bureau of Probation and Parole. During the five-year period, probation and parole average populations increased every year, with the highest rate of increase in 1974. Again, this is partly due to the state absorption of all Milwaukee County adult probation cases, completed in 1974. The 1975 increase was down 9.1 percentage points from 1974.

1975	17,243	+12.5

Note: Includes probation, parole, and outpatient sex crimes cases.

During the last five calendar years, annual average population of incarcerated offenders (adult and juvenile) declined from 3,741 in 1971 to 2,759 in 1973, then went back up in 1974 and reached 3,523 in 1975. Increasing adult institutional populations are expected in the years immediately ahead (see Table C).

Table D depicts probation average daily population increases from 5,857 in 1971 to 14,392 in 1975. The probation increase over the five-year period amounted to nearly 150 percent (8,535 cases).

Average parole numbers, also shown in Table D, revealed a gradual four-year decline in total population through 1974. During 1975, however, the parole population increased slightly reflecting increased institution admissions beginning in 1973. During the 1960's and up to about 1971 the probation population was about equal to the parole caseload. In recent years, however, the probation population has greatly exceeded the number on parole.

Additional information about probation is presented in Table E and information about parole can be found in Table F. (Slight differences in population counts may be noted between these two tables compared with counts in Table D, due to the different methods of averaging that were used.)

Changes among specific types of probation cases can be reviewed in Table E. Combined end-of-the-month average population for adult male and adult female probation increased steadily by 1,000 to nearly 3,000 additional cases each year. In the five-year period, average number of adult probationers more than doubled, with the highest yearly increase in calendar year 1974. This growth is partially attributable to the completed take-over of cases from Milwaukee County.

The end-of-the-month average combined male and female juvenile probation population declined from a high of 559 in 1971 to a low in 1973 of 270. Juvenile probation numbers have stabilized during 1974 and 1975, averaging about 340 cases.

From calendar year 1971 through 1975 end-of-the-month average population of males and females from other states supervised in Wisconsin (Interstate Compact cases) increased gradually each year, reaching a combined total of 329 in 1975. Roughly 95 percent of all cases supervised in Wisconsin from other states were adults. Table E

Table F shows that during the last five calendar years the annual combined end-of-the-month averages of adult male and female parolees and mandatory releasees has changed only slightly, a small increase appearing in 1975.

During the last five-year period the average end-of-the-month population of juvenile males on aftercare decreased rapidly from 1,783 in calendar year 1971 to 457 in calendar year 1975. Over the same period the average for juvenile females on aftercare also decreased comparably. The sizeable reduction in juvenile population from 1972 to 1973 was due primarily to the change in the age of majority from 21 to 18.
