Foreword

People use and misuse drugs—and take up other kinds of negative, destructive behavior—because they are trying to fill a void within themselves, or inside their worlds. We all have needs and urges we feel we must try to satisfy: physical requirements; the need to avoid hunger, pain, and tension; the need to relate to others, to receive recognition and approval; the need for emotional outlet; the need for learning and for creating; the need for spiritual satisfaction, for feeling a part of something larger than ourselves. When there is something we want or feel we need, but we cannot get it, drugs may appear to be an option or a substitute.

Most of the drugs that lead to problems of abuse are strong reinforcing substances. They make us feel good—at least at first. They often change the way we feel about ourselves, about our world. And so, rather than dealing with the need we feel, we often come to rely on the chemical substitute. And this reliance can lead us into an unrewarding lifestyle of increased pain and loneliness and unhappiness—because we come to depend on the chemical stimulus, rather than dealing with the unfulfilled need.

The early efforts at preventing drug abuse among young people relied on what became known as “scare tactics.” Many people believed that, if young people were exposed to the ugly effects of drug abuse, they would avoid becoming involved with dangerous drugs. But this “scare tactics” approach only had limited success: Many young people and some who were no longer young dissociated themselves, their friends, and their lifestyles from the scenes and experiences portrayed.

The “scare tactics” were followed by more moderate information campaigns. It was hoped that if young people were provided factual information about the effects and the risks of drug abuse, they would make responsible decisions concerning the use of these substances. However, this approach also met with only limited success because the facts about drug effects were too often seen as just other "scare tactic" approaches.

It is, however, important to recognize that, while these approaches failed to stop drug abuse, neither "scare tactics" nor informational efforts were ineffective. Both of these techniques remain important parts of an overall drug abuse prevention strategy. There are aspects of the drug abuse problem and the effects of certain drugs that are "scary," and people need to be warned about such hazards. Most drug users do not know as much as they should about the pharmacological and psychological effects of the drugs they use; providing factual information about the effects of drugs remains an important effort. Other drug abuse prevention techniques work, as well: efforts to reduce the availability of drugs on the street, in our schools, and in our communities; close observation of young people's behaviors and prompt intervention when drug-related problems appear; encouraging goals and setting limits for young people's behaviors and activities.

When the National Institute on Drug Abuse was created in 1973, we initiated a renewed effort to improve and expand our understanding of drug abuse prevention—what works and what does not work as well. We listened to young people, became aware of their concerns and their needs, payed attention to their views. If drugs were being used to substitute for unfulfilled needs, we realized, opportunities should be provided to meet those needs—practical, meaningful alternatives to drug use. And we also realized that direct participation by youth in the creation of such alternatives and opportunities was, itself, a way for them to satisfy their needs—their need for involvement, for recognition and fulfillment.

Our search for alternative behaviors quickly included a host of orientations, experiences, lifestyles, opportunities, activities, and pastimes—in short, anything that helped young people (and adults, as well) to learn about themselves, to grow, to feel good about themselves and about where they were going in their lives. This is what is meant by "alternatives" as a drug abuse prevention strategy: fostering and encouraging behaviors and activities that provide positive fulfillment of individuals' aspirations.

Clearly, there was a need to identify programs and activities that were giving young people the opportunities they needed to feel a part—an active controlling part—of their own lives and of their worlds. So, we also listened to communities. We looked for community-based and neighborhood-based programs that helped young people to grow and that enabled them to explore and develop their own opportunities from inception to management. We found scores of programs—shaped to the particular needs of individual neighborhoods, schools, and communities—that made young people feel good about themselves and their prospects. These are happy programs, full of excited, involved individuals sharing with one another.

Our National Search for Youth Initiatives in Drug Abuse Prevention was the instrument of our listening to young people and to communities. This catalog is the product of our search. This document is intended to encourage the multiplication of successful, youth-involving programs and activities in every community in the Nation. Young people need the experience and advice of adults, but they also need to grow and explore and succeed on their own and among their friends.

We hope the programs and activities described in this catalog will help you to develop positive alternatives to drug use in your community. This is our way of helping you and your neighborhood to listen to communities like yours—and learn how they learned to reduce drug use.

Background

Traditional structures and institutions in our society often are seen by youth and many adults as having little to do with their lives in a positive way. Government agencies, political structures, schools, families, the media, churches, business organizations, and others all appear at times to contribute more to the frustrations than to the positive developmental needs of young people. The answer to this dilemma lies within each of us and not in "the government" or in "the schools" or even in "the family." Our institutions, as reflections of ourselves, actually can be molded only by ourselves.

In an effort to promote and encourage awareness of this key concept, the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA) conducted the National Search for Youth Initiatives in Drug Abuse Prevention. The Search has been a 3-year effort to identify and spotlight successful community-based programs which provide young people with constructive alternatives to drug abuse, to encourage youth throughout the country to develop their own ideas for workable new programs, and to put these ideas into action.

Alternative projects cover a wide range of imaginative pursuits including the arts, new technology, career incentives, televideo media, recreation, self-awareness, social endeavors, information exchange, environmental impact, personal health, and community celebrations.

The Search is not a project, not a contest, but rather a process to encourage communication among young people and adults and to explore positive alternatives for youth involvement. As such, it is not adult-directed; it is youth-directed.

Phase I of the Search focused upon identifying existing programs. Eleven National Models and outstanding programs from many States in the Union were selected by a national panel on which young adults played a prominent role. The criteria used in spotlighting these programs were innovativeness, degree of youth participation in planning and implementation, replicability, and program format.

BACKGROUND

Descriptions of all Phase I nominations, beginning with national models and State selections, make up the first section of this catalog and serve two purposes:

- To provide an overview of the kinds of community related activities which are proving most successful;
- To give specific help to communities trying to organize new efforts.

During Phase I, the National Search staff contacted communities, schools, and public and private organizations all over the country seeking nominations of local programs doing successful drug prevention work with young people. A national panel including young people, youth advocate groups, school systems, and related government agencies evaluated the 650 nominations and chose 90 outstanding programs representing 48 States and, finally, 11 national models of special excellence and potential replication.

The following is a listing of the participants in the Phase I panel:

Phase II of the National Search was a nationwide effort to encourage teams of young people between the ages of 13 and 19 to plan and set in motion activities in which they could have key roles in improving their communities. During Phase II, a national panel of Search collaborators chose 19 regional selections and 10 National Models. They were given special recognition and were awarded mini-grants ranging from $250 to $2,000. Through the coordinated efforts of local colleges and libraries, the Manpower and Training Branch of NIDA, Smith-Kline Corporation, and International Industrial Television Association (ITVA), training in video-tape skills and techniques was completed in the summer of 1975. Those regional selections and National Models now possess the skills to utilize portable video-tape equipment as a communications tool for sharing their projects with other communities. Some of their finished tapes will be used as models and distributed throughout the country by the government.

In Phase III of the Search, another intensive, nationwide effort was made to reach programs which might have been overlooked in previous identifications, especially those programs in rural areas or serving minority populations. A particular emphasis was placed on evaluation strategies employed by or for these programs, with the intention of sharing information in order to create valid and practical evaluation techniques for future use by all programs. On page 1 of this directory begins a list of the programs found which have been evaluated, with individual entries noting when and by whom the programs were evaluated.

During the process of Search, it has been gratifying to learn of hundreds of communities across the country—and even abroad—which have initiated efforts to provide young people with opportunities to explore positive alternatives to negative behavior such as drug abuse. The Search has encouraged and assisted these efforts by beginning the establishment of channels of communication among drug abuse prevention programs around the country in a collaborative network of private, public, local, State, and Federal agencies and individuals, including young adults and youth advocate groups. The preliminary catalog and this expanded listing have combined the thinking, dedication, and persistence of many people and organizations. It represents a unique collaboration of public and private sectors and the combined efforts of youth and adults. Documents which were developed during the National Search may be requested from NIDA by those States planning to conduct their own State search.

Suggestions for Use of the Catalog

The major goal of this catalog is to facilitate communication among individuals involved in servicing our Nation's youth. It has been designed to serve the user as an efficient tool. The program entries are divided into five major categories: National Models, State Selections, Honorable Mentions, List of Evaluated Programs, and Descriptions of Prevention Programs. All of the programs listed in the catalog are viable means of assisting youth to become healthy and productive citizens.

In each section entries are identified by State and listed alphabetically within each State according to program title. The Descriptions of Prevention Programs also cross-references those programs found in the first four categories. For example, a National Model or State Selection will also be found in this section by name only, referring the user to the appropriate category for the program description.

Each entry has been designed to convey a maximum amount of information to the user: program name, address, contact person, phone number, hours available where applicable, and a general program description. Unique features and/or operational instruments are offered to define the successful ingredients of the programs.

One of the basic tenets of the Search is that people are best served when given the opportunity and the means to help themselves. The catalog is designed as a tool for use in solving problems rather than providing answers to the problems themselves. Use of the catalog therefore is one of the most important phases of the Search.

Depending on the user's needs, the information contained in the catalog can be used in a variety of ways. For example, one might look up programs in his or her State, scan for programs whose general direction or process is similar to one's own, or select National Models or other outstanding programs which seem to have goals and resources applicable to one's own situation for direct contact leading to discussion of ideas and shared information. Program descriptions can be used as the basis for developing new services needed in an existing agency or program.

Although every reasonable attempt has been made to include as much data as possible in these program descriptions, the most beneficial and efficient use of this catalog and its information requires that the reader contact programs in which he/she is interested. In this way a personal communication system or network can be created, a network which can result in shared ideas, techniques, resources, and possibly even services and/or manpower for programs similar to one another. The friendships that may develop and the sharing of both success and disappointment can lead to new motivation through support and constructive criticism.

A unique quality of this program is its use of theatre to "turn people on" toward a positive way of life. Since 1972 this strongly community-oriented program has offered alternatives to boredom and destructive behavior by helping youth build a positive self-concept through activity. Techniques involved are improvisations, skits, psychodrama, and videotaping. Presentations are made available free of charge to the community, schools, and the general public. Participants are responsible for writing scripts, choosing materials to be presented, and the public performances.

This community-linked program, initiated in 1969, deals mainly with poor Chicanos, blacks, and Caucasians and the problems facing these groups. The primary function is to provide positive alternatives for negative behavior exhibited by the clients who range in age from 8 to 75 years. Their needs are met through counseling at the Drop-in Center, drug education discussions, activities and recreation, workshops (youth and adult), in values clarification, day care programs, educational and vocational referrals and a detoxification input from youth through a Youth Advisory Council which has policymaking power. Project Adelante was evaluated by both the Human Resources Commission's Drug Committee and the Pueblo Council on Drug Abuse in January 1974.

This program seeks to develop attitudes of responsibility in youngsters between the ages of 15 and 17 years. Intellectual and academic growth is encouraged along with the youth's emotional and occupational development. Established in 1966, this school program deals primarily with ocean life, in the belief that the ocean already has been a source of motivation. Services offered are counseling, recreation, vocational training and courses leading to qualifications for a high school diploma. The courses involve marine life, incorporating concepts such as math and physics with scuba diving. With nine full-time employees and eight part-time, there always is someone available to the youth who live at the Institute. The Ford Foundation and the Division of Youth Services have evaluated the program.

The Carriage House Project was started in 1969 as a drop-in, growth-oriented center for young people and their parents, "accepting them where they are and trying to help them get to where they want to be." Objectives are met through counseling, "growth experiences," education, and therapy workshops, community education and training sessions. The community-linked program is run by professionals with youth representation on the governing body to help set policy and design programs.

Established in 1969, this school-based program is designed to help young people develop a positive self-image, emphasizing the individual's ability to control his or her own life. It is directed toward students from low-income and working-class backgrounds in the hope of discouraging defeatist attitudes by means of an academic program leading to a high school diploma. The program offers classes developed by staff and students, vocational training, and small group counseling. The school emphasizes democratic decisionmaking and student control. The students are a majority on the Board of Directors and in other decisionmaking bodies in the school. The program has been evaluated extensively by the Department of Youth Services.

Since December 1972, this community-oriented program has offered a multiservice youth program designed to deal with the causes of youth problems in order to develop positive psychological and social strength. These goals are met through inter-agency cooperation, sponsoring an alternatives high school, offering recreational activities, counseling, hotline services, parent rap groups and community involvement activities. Youths participate directly in program planning and serve on the Advisory Board. The Alternatives School (Mautabon) is administered by youths with adult advisors and the Evening Youth Program is staffed by adult and youth volunteers. Inhouse evaluations have been conducted.

Instituted in March 1970, the goals of this program are to facilitate in all New York City schools an atmosphere of encouragement for student decisionmaking, and to provide intellectual, social, cultural, and recreational alternatives to drug abuse. In this school-based setting it is hoped that students will learn to like themselves more as people, thus improving communication within each school. Workshops, counseling, and special events are provided for students, all school personnel, parents and community groups. More than 200 staff members are assisted in all facets of the program by the students involved in its activities. SPARK was evaluated by SAODAP (1963) and GEOMET.

The goal of this inner-city program is to help youth avoid involvement in drug abuse by improving students' school ability, preparing youth for community leadership, encouraging creative potential, and strengthening the sense of control over one's own life. These goals are met through counseling and various workshops in communication skills, values clarification, and human relations. Training also is offered in the areas of meaningful employment, community service opportunities, cultural and academic experience, and counseling. The program's more than 300 staff members receive direct input from youth who serve on advisory boards and participate in staff meetings. Shalom was created in 1963 and Operation Discovery in 1972. Since 1969, this strongly community-oriented program has offered counseling therapy to strengthen communication for youth and their families who are displaying some type of negative behavior. These services are supported by a drop-in center, recreation and activities in an effort to coordinate approaches to youth problems. An annual action plan advocates innovative approaches to youth problems as yet to be served. Some ideas thus far promoted are: 1) a six agency coalition to deal with coordinated diagnosis and treatment of delinquency; and 2) the design and promotion of an alternative junior high school. A youth council serves in both a treatment mode and as a programmatic board of advisors. The program was evaluated in 1974 by the Program Planning and Grant Administration.

Established in 1972, this heavily community oriented program is designed to provide preventive counseling for youth who feel that they are exhibiting behaviors not conducive to their personal growth and development. It offers the youth a positive climate for growth and learning in the areas of problem solving techniques, need fulfilling skills, constructive team formation, and talent appreciation. In order to meet these goals, it offers a 24-hour hotline, counseling, rap groups, and peer group activities, referrals, and crisis intervention. The role of the staff advisor is one of support ("the young people are the program . . .") and the youth are encouraged to promote their ideas on what they feel the program should be doing. The program is being evaluated by the Mental Health, Mental Retardation, Alcohol and Drug Abuse Services Board.

The Self-Esteem Class is an elective course which was developed in December 1972. Each student carries out four experiments in an effort to raise his own self-esteem, internalize his basic code of conduct, and gain control of his own life. The experiences each student discovers are shared with the rest of the group in an atmosphere of support and encouragement. Two hundred students between the ages of 16 and 26 participate in the class annually. They are involved in program implementation by structuring the direction of their own interests and experiments. Two part-time volunteers serve as staff for the class. The program has been evaluated by Idaho State University and Idaho's Single State Agency.

Shelter House, developed in November of 1972, is a two-pronged effort offering a county-wide youth service bureau and a community based juvenile corrections project. The Youth Service Bureau is a delinquency prevention program with four youth centers, a crisis line, referral and information services, and an alternative high school. The juvenile corrections project offers counseling services, volunteer big brothers, temporary residential care, home placement, and community education and consultation. Teenagers occupy four positions on the Story County Youth Commission and hold staff positions as youth advocates. During its first year of operation, Shelter House handled almost 8,000 clients between the ages of 10 and 18 as youth job placements, walk-ins, out-clients, and residents. Fifteen paid workers and 26 volunteers composed the staff. The program was evaluated by Metcor, Inc. from July of 1974 to March of 1975.

This multifaceted community-based program has been operating since April of 1972. The program offers counseling through hotline, drop-in center, and community awareness presentations. Other services include drug education and analysis, as well as alternatives such as music, art, and dances. The youth involvement lies in the various teams used to support the services. Some young persons are trained to be volunteer counselors and many volunteers are hired as paid staff. With a paid staff of 12 and 16 volunteers, the program deals with approximately 3,250 people yearly through its counseling and referral contacts. The program also makes about 80 educational presentations each year. In April of 1974 an evaluation was conducted by the Maryland Drug Abuse Administration.

This state project is an outward bound experience. Since 1973 the program has taken fifteen 14- to 25-year-olds monthly on 1- to 2-week outdoor excursions. Each participant is aided by the 13 staff members in developing a positive self-image through the wilderness experience. An important aspect of the program is the fact that each participant is responsible for his own survival throughout the experience.

In 1970 the Alternative Schools Network, a group of 36 alternative schools, was formed, primarily in Chicago's low income areas. The schools are locally controlled, community-based centers offering academic curriculum as well as art, music, photography, work experience, and participation in community affairs. Independent projects, apprenticeship programs, and field trips are among the opportunities available. The students serve on the Board of Directors of the schools and share in decisionmaking concerning their courses and selection of teachers and administrators. The 321 paid employees and 29 volunteers serve approximately 3,000 students daily in the school system. Students from kindergarten through senior high school are involved. Each school is evaluated by a range of tests used to measure academic progress.

The Maine Drug Education Program is a state-wide effort to train teachers to implement programs of preventive mental health and to develop youth/adult community groups to assess local needs and implement solutions. In addition, it trains professionals and community people working with youth in communications, values, self-concept, social interaction, problemsolving, and action planning. Young people share in the workshop design and are involved in the implementation of the Human Development Program (stressing primary prevention). Many of the projects resulting from the leadership training institutes were conceived and operated by youths. Maine Drug Education Program was initiated in 1970 and employs 4 full-time paid workers and 50 part-time volunteers. Three thousand participants, 16 years of age and over,

This program initiated in 1972 is a county-wide effort in drug education and prevention. Components of the program include a 17-week educational program for parents, inservice teacher training, public workshops for professional and lay groups, and drug education and counseling within the schools. Young people have been involved in the development of these programs and take part in them to allow adults to hear how young people think about various issues and topics. Evaluations of the program have been carried out by Carbon County Mental Health Center staff.

Established in 1972, this community-involved program is designed to provide preventive counseling for youth who feel that they are exhibiting behaviors not conducive to their personal growth and development. It offers the youth a positive climate for growth and learning in the areas of problem-solving techniques, self-fulfilling skills, constructive team formation, and talent appreciation. To meet these goals, it offers a 24-hour hotline, counseling, rap groups and peer group activities, referrals and crisis intervention. The role of the staff advisor is one of support ("the young people are the program. . ."). Youths' ideas are encouraged on what they feel the program should be doing. Evaluation was by the Mental Health, Mental Retardation, Alcohol and Drug Abuse Services Board.

Mercer House, which started in 1969, encourages adolescents to learn more about themselves through classes and programs such as adolescent communication and self-awareness groups, problem-solving groups handling stress, sex and responsibility seminars, child-sitter class, counseling, youth employment services, summer parks job program, and arts and crafts. It also works toward strengthening families by offering child management and drug education, communication, and self-awareness classes. In the local schools, it offers school/adolescent-parent referrals, student presentations, and ongoing teacher need assessments for Natrona County. The clients received a great deal of community support. About 600 adolescents visit the center monthly. Youth were directly involved on a Youth Advisory Board; although it is no longer needed, the young people have input to creation of new programs. Evaluations of the program were conducted in 1973 by the Institute for Social Concern.

List of Evaluated Programs

The following programs have been evaluated either inhouse or by outside services. Program entries contain when and by whom they were evaluated.

Due to the primitive status of evaluation research of drug abuse prevention programs generally, it should not be assumed that these programs have all, or even most, been subjected to rigorous study. Indeed, many were superficially assessed by inhouse project staff; some by community action organizations with little or no expertise in research; and some by university teams with only limited access to program data.

A number of projects collected input data only; a few took impact measures; very few programs had the baseline data essential for firm and conclusive evaluation studies.

This innovative community-directed program seeks to develop awareness of the needs of its youth by the community, stimulate interest in solving those problems and assist in developing and implementing techniques for solving problems and meeting needs. Problems are recognized and dealt with at the community and neighborhood level. A 5-week program involving recruitment, training, resource identification and implementation of developed solutions is introduced to the community by trained leaders. The emphasis is placed on the community using existing resources and manpower to take responsibility for its members. An administrator, 2 trainers and a part-time secretary as well as over 100 volunteers from the community help to implement the program.

The purpose of the Tucson Peer Group is to serve the students' needs not being met by the high school. The target group then is the average kid for whom school is not meeting his needs. Common among this group is wide experimentation with drugs, including alcohol. The approach will use group process, role playing, learning about various aspects of youth culture, and learning more about schools and institutions. Initial members would bring others into the fold. An estimate of $1,000 would be needed to advance this program.

This school-based organization is interested in improving skills for understanding others and self and for using these skills to interact with others in a way which would facilitate self-development. It uses small groups as a model for working with the difficulties experienced by group members in their interpersonal functioning or dysfunctioning. The treatment process begins with the actual transactions between group members and significant others in their lives. The young people have opportunities to become group leaders and practice improved interpersonal functioning. Title III Project has three paid workers and ten volunteers and is evaluated each year by an on-site evaluation team.

Rites of Passage, which began in February of 1973, is a counseling center for young people and their families in the school district. The program provides services to encourage and teach values clarification and the long-term effect of life thoughtfully lived. The coordinator and teacher of this program provides an atmosphere of trust, introduces models that demonstrate the integrity of man-made institutions, introduces strategies and questions that call attention to the shared requisites for health in said organisms and institutions, and transfers that understanding to the individual. The program helps 800 students, parents, and teachers in junior and senior high school. The young people select their own way into the program by choosing the content. This program is designed to help a youngster develop decisionmaking skills which will help him to deal more effectively with life problems such as drug abuse. The individual also develops through this process a better self-concept and the rubric of a personal value system. Inasmuch as personal decisionmaking is the key to the whole program, the students are, of course, completely involved in the process and are given increasing freedom to make choices and to deal with the consequences of their decisions. San Jose Unified School District, which started in May of 1972, is a program which provides San Jose Schools with special services. They provide a comprehensive health education program (including drug abuse), a special problem consultant to work with students and parents with any problem, crises management in secondary schools, plus student leadership training and self-esteem committees to write curriculum, develop guidelines, and assist with inservice training. They develop youth councils and student leadership workshops. The young people have a great deal to do with the credibility and direction the special problems consultants take. The programs have been evaluated by involved teachers, administrators, students, and parents.

The South Bay Drug Abuse Coalition has developed a program in which interested students will go out into the community and contact school drop outs, truants and agencies dealing with these people. The students will then initiate a reintegration program in which delinquents, truants, drug abusers and drop outs will learn living skills, job-finding and self-care skills, etc. Three programs will provide a vocational training in 6-month periods alternating between training and volunteer experience. The second program will stagger work experience with education toward graduation from high school. Then alternating periods of work and higher education of 6 months each would provide a stimulating educational background leading to a college degree. The program is focused at ages 12 to 18 and will work with 100 clients per year. An estimated $1,000 will be needed to implement this idea.

The program, which began in July of 1971, includes a full spectrum of residential care and counseling services, education, consultation, research, and referrals. Paid counselors (28) and 18 volunteer counselors relate to their clients, age 12 to 17 years, as attorneys. The young people have a voice during the weekly meetings of each service component in the system and their needs determine what services are provided. The programs have been evaluated by the Institute for the Study of Social and Health Issues, Berkeley, since 1973. The services of Youth Advocates, Inc. currently are being evaluated by ISSHI under a recent 1-year contract from NIMH.

Woodstock is a small rural town in extreme northeastern Connecticut with no activities during the summer months except for a Little League Team. This vacuum provides no viable alternative except to do almost anything suggested by anyone. The objectives of this youth team are: (1) provide access to the Field House, a basketball court, a playground, the common, and music and art room; (2) provide minimal equipment needs—baseballs, basketballs, and art supplies; (3) to give school age people a chance to organize, plan, and run these activities; (4) provide entertainment by way of a series of concerts, movies, and craft demonstrations; (5) to provide some type of transportation, as there is no public transportation. To implement this program $1,500 will be needed for equipment, transportation and supervision.

At the J. M. Tate High School, it is necessary to start a youth blood donation drive. The participants would be 17 years and up and the drive would consist of urging them to go to Escambia Blood Bank to donate blood. The recruiting of blood donors in the school would be done by publicizing and informing the student body about the needs for blood donors and the ways in which this project could help students and the community. So far 130 students have been involved in the blood drive, with TV and newspaper coverage. The students find that the community's need for blood is being met, but the need is continuous.

PCMI would like to maintain an unspoiled island which is used for camping by many. Right now, there is no garbage disposal facility on the island. The youths would like to obtain and label twenty 55-gallon drums to be used for garbage collection. They would use their boats, equipment and manpower to collect and remove the garbage, transferring it back to the mainland and disposing of it in the proper manner. Since the youths are involved in regular seamanship and driving exercises in the area, they would make weekly "visual inspection" to insure that they are maintaining control of the problem. In addition to surface clean-up, DCMI would also remove debris from the shallow lagoon area used for swimming. The drums, plastic liners, paint, and gasoline would cost $250 in order to implement this program.

The Tampa Bay improvement plan is designed to improve the current ecological and health conditions of all waterways and land areas in direct relation to Tampa Bay. Among the proposals are: (1) a City Work Program designed for the unemployed to be paid for helping in the clean-up of Tampa Bay; (2) an increase of controls and penalties for any craft that purposely pollutes; (3) recommendation of improved runoff and filtration devices for screening waste deposited by industry and residents; and (4) imposing an ecologically based tax on large international cargo vessels entering Tampa Bay. The young men of the Institute intend these projects to better their community and they hope through them to relate more successfully with the young people of all communities.

The Youth Awareness Movement's main objective is to make people (both youth and adults) aware of the problems and situations in their community, country, and world. YMA started in November 1974 and has implemented many projects relating to such concerns as helping delinquent and problem youth with reading difficulties. Forty-five high school students fasted for 30 hours in a fund raising project. YAM would like to be an open channel for all problems and to motivate response. They would like to expand to other communities to show what they have done by means of videotape or a newsletter.

The major goal of this project is to reduce the number of youths abusing drugs and engaging in anti-social behavior. Workshops will be offered in drug education, assertiveness training, communication skills, values clarification, and crafts. A group of 15 youths have been elected to a Youth Advisory Council whose function is to act as planners and to be involved in evaluating the program. There are two paid workers and three volunteers.

Steinmetz High School in Chicago has recognized its large problem of Drug Abuse and has set up a program called the Concern Room. The Concern Room will be available to all students during their study period. It is hoped that the counselors will help all students feeling depressed because of misunderstandings, or just wanting to talk with someone not only on drug-related problems. The counselors are trained in many areas—crisis intervention, peer counseling, etc. The effect of training was to improve their own images as well as learning how to help others. Fifteen students and two teachers are presently involved and more are awaiting the next training schedule. There is plenty of energy but the Concern Room needs $1,000 to redecorate the room and hire people to do the training.

The Outreach Program is a police-linked organization that attempts to intervene on youth's behalf during peak crisis situations. Special arrangements with community police departments allow Project Outreach workers to work with parents and youth to help setup plans, hopefully as an alternative to court. The Police Outreach Program started in 1971 and has 14 full-time paid workers with 23 working on a volunteer basis. It works with teenagers and young adults and has flexibility so that the program is working in six additional police departments. Ramon J. Rivera & Associates evaluated this program in March 1974.

The students at Batesville High School would like to create a panel of young people to speak at service clubs and organizations about their problems in communication patterns by meeting with educators, school boards, and the community task force to build their support. The students will have four to five groups of high school students trained in peer relationships by mental health workers. Teachers are trained in communication skills through the Department of Public Instruction. The trained groups will work

A peer influence group has been set up in South Bend. The youth find that there are few social institutions in the area, and they close down on Friday. The group feels that the community needs a coffee house. The coffee house could be managed and staffed by high school students. It would be a place where people could come and listen to local musicians play their own music, share their own arts and crafts, and provide resource information or, most important, a place just to meet a friend. It would give the youth a chance to develop responsibility, to share their creativity as well as their skills. The coffee house would focus on ages 13 to 19 and serve about 100 youths per week. Needs include a facility and materials for an estimated cost of $1,500.

The goal of Open Door Education Program is to study the abuse of drugs within the context of learned problemsolving behaviors and to use tools such as values clarification, decisionmaking, leadership development, and self-actualization. Open Door Educational Specialists conduct 8-week training programs in high schools preparing the high schoolers to develop programs and work in the elementary schools. Open Door started in 1969 and has three full-time paid workers and approximately 40 volunteers. They work with about 300 high school trainees per month plus other activities such as workshops, community outreach, and youth employment.

Renaissance Home is a residential treatment center for juvenile offenders, offering a second change alternative to youth who otherwise would be sent to a reform school. The Home employs 11 full-time employees as well as utilizing volunteers to provide ongoing individual and family counseling and maintain a behavior modification management system while the youth is in the home. This system is designed to maximize the acquisition of decision skills. Counseling sessions focus on causes rather than symptoms. Renaissance Home undergoes continual evaluation by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.

A youth involved with drugs has found that Transcendental Meditation has helped him tremendously and would like to see it help others. Up to 1,300 students would participate and $1,000 will be needed to obtain Transcendental Meditation teachers, and perhaps to train teachers to continue the program.

The Group School serves students from low income and working class backgrounds. One important reason many working class teenagers are in self-destructive patterns of drug usage is that they have few positive expectations for their lives—they have come from the poorest neighborhoods, the worst schools, and they see ahead of them a future of oppressive dead end jobs. This Group is helping students develop positive self-images which emphasize their ability to control their own lives. The Group School was largely started by young people, many who have dropped out of public schools, some who have had trouble with the law. These young people and a few adults had run a drop-in center and part-time school before the Cambridge School Committee certified their school. There are 13 paid workers and approximately 100 volunteers. This program has been evaluated by the Committee on Law Enforcement as well as several State agencies.

The Destination Project would like to create a sense of belonging in the young people of Hopkinton. The goals are to provide a project that is self-sufficient economically, so that decisions can be made by the young people themselves. In the belief that gangs promote and meet some needs in young people, Destination has designed a project that fulfills some of these needs in a constructive manner. This group is working on a canoe renting business and has many other ideas in the works.

Pittsfield High School would like to implement a drug education program in its school system. The program geared to the sixth grade students would involve a film that devotes a great deal of time to the problems of decisionmaking and peer pressure. After the film, a panel of high school students would relate the film to drug abuse and discuss the different types of drugs, their effects, the law, and what the sixth graders themselves can do to stop drug abuse. This part of the program will last an hour. A 30-minute small group discussion would follow in which the high school students would give further explanations and answers to any questions. One thousand sixth graders will be affected.

Project Bread is a program for young adults who have had problems with drugs, alcohol, mental breakdowns, or family problems. The young adults in the group are taught a skill in a relaxed, enjoyable atmosphere without the pressures of exams or grades. A small store is opening in Marblehead and the owner will allow the students of "Project Bread" to take over the food part of the store. The students will buy the ingredients, prepare the food, then deliver it in the morning. If the food area is successful, the shopkeeper will allow "Project Bread" to expand to put in tables and make more items. concerning hobbies and interest areas and uncover both presently available and potential recreational resources in the Salem area. After the surveys are completed, three steps will be taken by the team: (1) review interest areas and hobbies of homebound elders and provide transportation to activities which interest them; (2) match each homebound person with at least one other having the same interest and encourage communication; (3) explore the possibility of getting local radio stations to put on a weekly program for the elderly. Communication Skills Seminar
250 South 4th Street
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55415

This community-linked program has focused its attention on families since its inception in January 1973. The five paid staff members and three volunteers conduct 10-week seminars in communication skills utilizing values clarification, role playing, peer pressure, and drug use and misuse information. The seminars reach some 900 adolescents and their parents annually. Upon completion of the seminar the adolescents can go on to be trained as group facilitators. The University of Minnesota's Drug Information and Education program evaluated the project in January, 1973.

Organized in 1971, Front Door Counseling and Youth Center is a program which offers counseling, i.e., rap sessions and community workshops; job placement, i.e., youth employment service; alternatives, i.e., classes and leisure activity; and drug education with speakers. In addition, it has a hotline and referral service. The main objectives of this program are to provide personal growth experiences for all youth and their families, provide an environment that youth can identify with for their own needs and problems and provide youth with alternatives for negative and self-destructive behavior. Youth in the community make up 35 percent of the Board of Directors and 45 percent of the Speaker's Bureau. There are some 300-370 clients each month. There are 2 full-time paid workers and 20 volunteers on the staff. The clients are between 12 and 19 years of age. The program was evaluated in 1974 by the State Division of Mental Health.

The Student Council would like to set up alcohol workshops to deal with the increasing abuse of alcohol among young people. The program would consist of movies and discussions that would present facts and information on alcohol abuse. The discussions would be conducted by fellow students so that communication would be more open and free. Through the program students could become aware of the fact that they may have a drinking problem and they could be directed to the proper agency for help. The workshop would affect 25 percent of a student body of 2,000 and will need $250 to implement the program.

This proposal would serve to promote beautification and pride in the communities of Hawthorne and Babbit. As a broader aspect the school and town will be taking an active part in celebrating the Bicentennial in such programs as "Horizons '76" and Heritage. The changes in the community would be centered on the high school where the building of a patio area is being planned. The high school is a major part of Hawthorne as the town is very small and is seen by any one who spends any length of time in the area.

Twelve Mexican-American youths between the ages of 13 and 19, from low income backgrounds, will meet on a regular weekly basis for intensive Mexican/Spanish dance instruction for an initial period of 4 months. These 12 youths will then, through the coordination of efforts with the sponsoring agency, branch out into their respective neighborhoods and schools and begin teaching younger students. The target area the program hopes to affect has, at present, no other cultural or ethnically related activities available to these youths on a community level. Cultural enrichment for these youths will develop their social and personal skills.

This 24-hour-a-day service operates a crisis switchboard, provides information and makes referrals in an effort to refer those in need of services to the services available. In addition, needed services are offered when unavailable elsewhere for financial or other reasons. Using 4 paid administrators who supervise the operation, 95 volunteers provide the available services. The community has responded well to the program as indicated by the increasing number of referrals and volunteers including police, social service agency personnel and probation personnel.

The object of the program is to provide educational services to drug-involved clients who have learning problems and are behind, failing, or have dropped out of school. These services are provided in order to enable them to find direction and reenter the mainstream. The philosophy is that the alienation, isolation, and sense of failure felt by these students is a direct cause of their drug involvement and other self-destructive behavior. The staff feels that the reentry into the mainstream of society will help alleviate the reliance on drugs for escape from reality and the feeling that they must submit to peer pressure. The Woodward Mental Health Center is a county-wide outreach program which has been operating in the Nassau County area for 5 years. Individual, family, and group counseling, rehabilitation counseling, crisis service, exposure to academic and occupational training, vocational counseling, job placement, and followup are offered in the program format. A client moves at his own pace through training and the entire treatment plan is individually designed. The staff includes approximately 25 paid workers who serve 150 clients ranging from 16 to 25 years of age. Continual assessments of the program are made by the County of Nassau Department of Drug and Alcohol Addiction Commission and the NYS Drug Abuse Control Commission.

Together is a 24-hour hotline and walk-in service where counselors are on duty to answer questions, provide information or referral, and to allow clients to speak freely about their concerns in an accepting atmosphere. The program, which began in December of 1971, was established to meet community and school mental health needs including drug abuse prevention information. Many of the 40 to 50 volunteers of Together's counselors are the same age group as clients served. The program was evaluated in January of 1973 by the Drug Task Force of the Mental Health and Retardation Board of Butler County.

The youth also have been sponsoring square dances at the VA hospitals since 1973 to give the veterans contact with the outside world and help youths learn to deal with the elderly. Another facet of the project is a play, Play Doctor Play Nurse. The high school team presents a program to kindergarteners about hospitals and doctors' offices to lessen the child's fear of doctors. The "Lovely Civic Association" has been organized to help the neighborhood shape up both mentally and physically. The association has found that idleness is too common for the youths and has set up athletic activities, a tutoring program including a six Ed. preparatory course, a talent development group (drama and musical troops), along with five neighborhood beautification teams. Approximately 280 to 300 youths are involved, ages 13 to 19 years. The adults in this Philadelphia neighborhood are divided into block areas and serve as community coordinators. To have this program continue, approximately $1,500 is needed.

The Kensington Action Center is a broad base, community-linked program. It carries out educational programs, tutoring, and remedial reading along with preparatory courses, recreational programs, arts and crafts, senior citizen groups, camping and field trips. It needs funds to carry this project further in this working class area and hopes to expand into a community social service center that will be responsive to the needs of the community. Presently Kensington Action Center serves an estimated 2,500 people of all ages and needs funds for transportation, recreational equipment, outside learning experiences (audio visual aids, speakers, trips, etc.). An estimated $1,500 will help this project.

The general program plan for this proposal is a 6-week camp experience for 50 to 60 children 8 to 12 years of age. These children will be chosen by an agency or group that is aware of the needs of children in that area. There will be 10 counselors in the 13 to 19 age group who will be responsible for the planning and executing of the activities for their campers. The counselors will participate in a training session prior to the start of the camp. The camp will make both camper and counselor aware of the needs of their own community and to develop a sense of social obligation. Part of the program would include entertainment for the elderly, hospitals, etc. on a biweekly basis. This program will require over $1,500 to be implemented.

This organization would like to broaden its volunteer services to the handicapped, the elderly, and children of low income families. They plan to entertain the children with games, and possibly seek professional aid to help them with their psychological handicaps. The team would also like to throw a party for the elderly once a month, to help handicapped individuals. They would like to have a program to teach young people how to help with the handicapped. About 130 people of all ages would be helped.

This group of young people with the help of Y.A.R.C. hopes to establish a program for the mentally retarded and handicapped of all ages and degrees of disability. This would be a physical development program concentrating on improving each individual's physical skills through individualized and group instructed activities. An emphasis would be placed on improving and increasing ability to manipulate and control body movements and to participate and contribute to group activities. Qualified people would help organize the program and help in volunteer orientation. The program will deal with about 25 to 30 participants and the same number of volunteers.

The student feedback system is a process which provides the opportunity for students to convey their ideas and needs to the school administration on various aspects of the school environment. The feedback system will take several forms: (1) a school team will be formed which will provide the initial insights into the youth-oriented needs; (2) a communication workshop will expand the team member approach in group process, communication skills, etc.; (3) formal feedback procedure. The trained team will gather completed questionnaires from each member of the student body responding to the program. Approximately 300 students will be involved.

All facets of community life are used as a means of providing a positive atmosphere for the development of human potential. This program was designed to meet the needs of youth as well as the geriatric population. Operating since 1974, it employs 10 full-time paid workers and 10 part-time volunteers. The program, which has been regularly evaluated, represents an effort to preserve the native values of the Puerto Rican community while safeguarding the emotional stability of the individual through the development of community action, recreational, vocational, and student programs.

Sound Living Camps provide a total environment for selected school dropouts and youth on vacation between the ages of 11 and 18. The program, initiated in 1974, provides youths with an opportunity to experience different modalities, valued manifestations of Puerto Rican life, as part of the process of learning to make better use of one's leisure time. A multifaceted program is offered which includes tours, festivals, and work experiences on plantations. The program is administered by a director who is assisted by a staff of 23 full-time and 7 part-time workers, and 10 part-time volunteers. Between 50 and 60 youth a month are selected for the program which has involved its clients in the organization of committees dealing with diverse problems in recreation, maintenance and discipline. Youths also have assisted in an on-going evaluation process.

Although it was not the intention of the Search to discover alternatives programs functioning outside United States jurisdictions, we had some submissions of high caliber deserving of inclusion in our catalog.

The following are programs which received certificates of recognition as outstanding efforts initiated and operating abroad.

Alternatives Group is a service organization dedicated to providing a wide variety of activities and services to the community. Some of the current projects are: a school store where student handi-crafts and artwork are sold, an alternative newspaper distributed throughout Europe where American military personnel are stationed, a community recycling center, an employment service for students, a multimedia festival, a "Whole Earth Catalogue" which focuses on local resources and activities, and a full-scale outdoor education program. Most of the projects are totally run by the students themselves and about 100 high school students are actively involved in the project. The Alternatives Group started in 1971 and has 1 paid part-time worker and 10 to 15 adult volunteers.

The International Teen Center and its program are designed to provide an alternative international extra-curricular activities center for Jakarta teenagers. The ITC is rapidly developing into an informal activities center and gathering place for international youth in Jakarta. It is providing a meaningful alternative to a myriad of other expensive and/or potentially dangerous spare time activities in Jakarta. The center is fully staffed, operated and programmed by the teen members through an elected three-member Board of Governors and a six-member elected Executive Council. The center opened in July 1974 and membership is open to all 9th to 12th graders of the Joint Embassy School plus a large number of Indonesian and non-Joint Embassy School youth. There are 2 full-time paid staff members and 10 part-time volunteers at ITC.

The SACAC Program aims to reduce the incidence of drug abuse among Americans in Singapore. Due to very strict laws and absence of medical confidentiality, SACAC does not operate any sort of treatment centers or halfway houses. The major objective is to provide alternative programs directed by the Youth Activities Committee (YACOM). These programs attempt to insure that feelings of harassment, repression, and frustrations are alleviated through an understanding of the local cultures and morals, and provide a large range of activities which relate directly to things of interest to American children. YACOM has conducted rock concerts, tours, a summer employment orientation program, and a host of other activities based on the expressed desires of the kids.
