FOREWORD

The surge in intentionally set fires goes on. Arson is the worst manmade disaster in America.

Arson:

Kills;
Injures innocent men, women, and children;
Makes people homeless;
Destroys personal property that can not be replaced;
Creates blighted neighborhoods;
Causes loss of jobs and business income;
Causes higher taxes; and
Escalates insurance premiums.

America is beginning to fight back to stop this costly crime.

States and localities and their fire service personnel, their law enforcement agencies, the insurance industry, the media, the legal profession and the judiciary, public officials, educators/trainers, psychiatric and social practitioners, neighborhood groups, and concerned citizens will find the Federal Emergency Management Agency's Arson Resource Directory a valuable tool in their fight to prevent and control arson. Here is a convenient switchboard to connect them with expertise in their fight against the arson menace.

If this nation is to succeed in responding to and managing this disaster — and it will — the full private sector, businesses, industry, the media, agencies and organizations, neighborhood groups, the private citizen, as well as public officials must join in a common effort. The Arson Resource Directory can help all of us make the connection for a coordinated, effective effort to reduce the surge of intentionally set fires.

PREFACE

The Western Fire Journal called the first edition of the Arson Resource Directory, "... the most comprehensive collection of anti-arson resource listings thus far compiled. What makes this such an excellent tool for local departments and State agencies is that it does not try to tell anybody how to run their arson program . . . What it does, is it allows a local program administrator to custom-format his program to his community's needs. It does this by providing the most complete listing . . . of anti-arson programs and agencies on the State, local, national and international level . . . and best of all, it includes names, addresses and telephone numbers for all of the above."

The second edition of the Arson Resource Directory is even more comprehensive and useful. It has more than doubled its size and the number of listings. With the addition of an alphabetical index of organizations, programs and individuals, users will find the Directory an even more convenient and helpful resource in their campaigns against arson.

INTRODUCTION

Background

Public Law 95-422, October 5, 1978, established a Federal focus within the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) on a serious national problem -- Arson. Prime coordination responsibility within FEMA was given to the Office of Fire Protection Management, U. S. Fire Administration. The purpose of this responsibility is to provide technical assistance to States and localities to develop policies which will help reduce, control, and prevent their incidents of arson.

Arson is a complex problem of enormous scope. Criminal involvement, human behavior, social change, business and economic trends, and the nature of fire contribute to arson's attack on our cities. Arsonists' motives range from emotional disturbance, revenge, to arson-for-profit. The responsibility for stopping arson does not rest solely with the fire service or with the police. Arson is a crime that crosses organizational boundaries and requires broadbased countermeasures for solution.

In 1976, with support from the American Insurance Association and assistance from the International Association of Arson Investigators, FEMA's U. S. Fire Administration began identifying and acquiring arson-related research state-of-the-art reports, and prevention and training materials to establish a technical information base. In 1979, in conformance with a recommendation in the U. S. Fire Administration's Report to the Congress, Arson: The Federal Role in Arson Prevention and Control, an Arson Resource Center was formally established by the Office of Fire Protection Management to provide arson information to the field. Among the Resource Center's specific objectives is the development and maintenance of a Directory of arson resources consisting of persons, organizations, programs, and available materials in the public and private sectors. The first edition was published in January 1980. This present Directory updates and vastly expands the information included in the first Directory.

Purpose and Use of the Arson Resource Directory

The Arson Resource Directory is meant to be more than a "classified phone book" where people let their fingers do the walking. Its purpose is to provide both an explanation and full identification of key resources -- organizations and individuals who are concerned, active, and successful in arson prevention and control. The Directory is a "switchboard" to help you get in touch with experts and resources and to assist you to coordinate your efforts with others to be more effective in stopping arson.

Actually, the Directory is simple to use. The Table of Contents identifies major organizational Parts, Sections, and Subsections. A table entitled, List of Directories, enables you, the reader, to locate specific anti-arson resource subject areas. Finally, at the back is a convenient alphabetical index identifying pages for programs, organizations and persons listed.

How the Arson Resource Directory is Organized

The organization of the Directory is divided into three parts. Part I contains the major programmatic areas, across the nation, concerned with arson prevention and control. Part II identifies miscellaneous groupings of Federal, public and private resources other than those falling into the programmatic areas. Part III is an alphabetical index of organizations, programs, and resources listed in the Directory.

Scope of Coverage

Part I follows the arrangement of the structure of the Report to the Congress: The Federal Role in Arson Prevention and Control. The Report recommended that arson must be attacked on four programmatic fronts — Management, Investigation and Prosecution, Economic, and Behavioral.

Under the first section of Part I, Management of Arson and Control Activities are several categories of resources, each introduced by explanatory information. Included are Arson Task Forces; Statewide Arson Organizations; Metropolitan Arson Task Forces County Arson Task Forces; Arson Squads/Units, Metropolitan, County, State. The next section of Part I is concerned with Sources of Arson Data, containing Federal Arson Data Programs; the National Fire Incident Reporting System; Private Sector Data Programs; and Arson Information Management Systems. Arson Public Education Programs, also, in Part I, follow: State Public Arson Education Programs; Community and Municipal Public Arson Education Programs; and Insurance Industry Arson Public Education Programs. Tipster/Hotline Programs are listed next and, then Arson Newsletters. Resources in Audio-Visual Presentations complete this subsection. Rounding the first section of Part I, Management of Arson and Control Activities are subsections listing Anti-Arson Neighborhood Groups and Arson Legislation Resources.

The second section of Part I, also includes explanatory information and is concerned with Programs and Resources for Investigation and Prosecution of Arson. Subsections include Federal Training Programs; State Arson Training Programs; College and University Training Programs; and Prosecution Training Programs. Another subsection is concerned with technology. Listed are Arson Laboratory Equipment Manufacturers and Forensic Laboratories providing analysis of arson evidence.

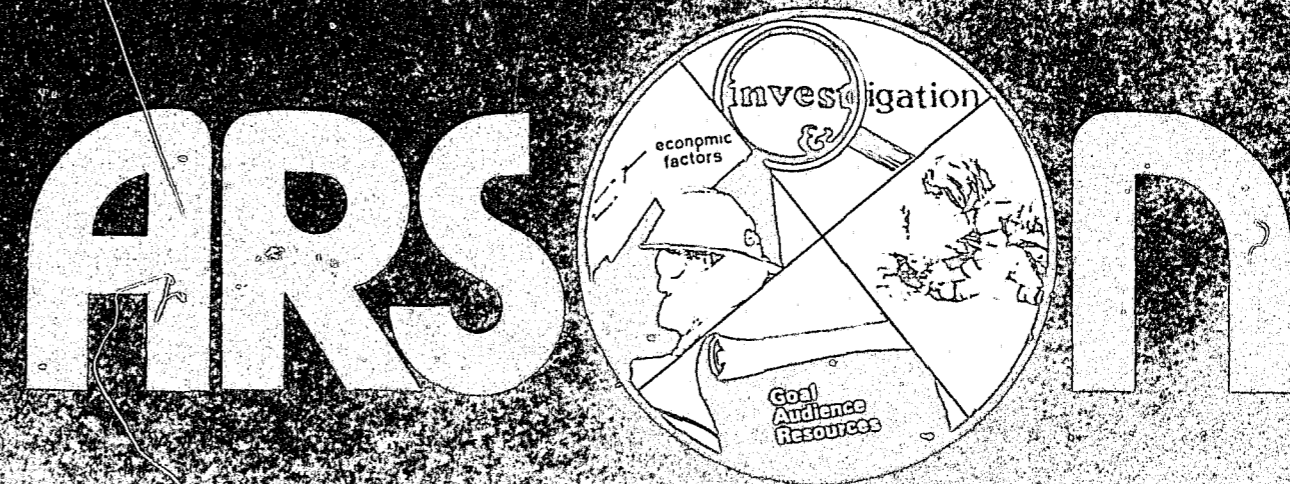

The third section under Part I is concerned with Economic Factors in Arson. After provision of background explanatory information, there are listings of the Insurance Committee for Arson Control and its various subcommittees; State FAIR Plans; and a miscellaneous grouping of insurance industry anti-arson resource organizations.

The last section of Part I is concerned with Behavioral Factors in Arson. It provides an identification of Juvenile Firesetter Counseling Programs.

Part II descriptively identifies additional Federal, public, and private organizations and programs having arson concerns, such as the International Association of Arson Investigators; Federal Agencies with programs for reducing arson; Field Division Offices of the Federal Bureau of Investigation; Field Offices of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms; Arson Research and Development Organizations, and Organizations with Specialized Arson Concerns.

Part III provides a convenient alphabetical index of organizations, programs, and persons listed in the Arson Resource Directory.

PART I

I. MANAGEMENT OF ARSON PREVENTION AND CONTROL ACTIVITIES AND RESOURCES

I. MANAGEMENT OF ARSON PREVENTION AND CONTROL
ACTIVITIES AND RESOURCES

Arson, the complex crime, requires diverse management approaches, agents, and agencies for its prevention and control. A concerned nation has instituted a number of management strategies to combat arson. Foremost is the Arson Task Force concept with its subsets of State, county, and metropolitan organizational units. This section also lists other agencies and entities responsible for management strategies. Arson Squads/Units, Data Resources, Arson Information Management Systems, Public Education Programs, Community Organizations, and Legislation.

ARSON TASK FORCES

The arson task force is a management system for the purpose of developing and implementing strategies to control and prevent arson. Its concept is simple: mobilize public and private resources; identify and coordinate responsibilities; set policy or guidelines; and integrate efforts of agencies, groups, and persons who are or should be involved into an organized strategy for implementing arson prevention and control. Arson task forces may fall into two general categories:

- o Legally or quasilegally constituted bodies; and
- o Private, advisory committees, usually initiated or supported by the insurance industry.

The primary stimulants to national acceptance and adoption of the arson task force strategy were the technical assistance to States and localities by the Federal Emergency Management Agency's U. S. Fire Administration and the financial support offered by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. The U. S. Fire Administration's Arson Task Force Assistance Program has been responsible for helping to establish more than 230 State, county, and municipal arson task forces. The Law Enforcement Assistance Association's Arson Control Assistance Program provided financial support to establish or maintain arson task forces in 34 jurisdictions.

RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE ARSON TASK FORCE

The arson task force has two major areas of responsibility. The first is policy setting, the second is program implementation.

Policy Setting Responsibilities.

1. Defining the community's arson situation by:
 - o identifying the problem,
 - o identifying the contributing factors,
 - o identifying and evaluating existing programs, if any, and
 - o identifying available resources.
2. Setting goals and objectives such as:
 - o classifying the magnitude of the arson problem,
 - o promoting public awareness, and
 - o increasing ratio of convictions for total number of arson incidents.

ARSON TASK FORCES — Continued

3. Setting policies, establishing priorities, and selecting programs such as:
 - o establishing training for all line firefighters, fire officers, and police officers,
 - o encouraging high professional standards for arson investigators and others concerned with arson prevention and control,
 - o defining responsibilities and jurisdictions for investigation of suspected incendiary fires,
 - o fostering and improving communication, coordination, and cooperation among fire departments, law enforcement agencies, the insurance industry, and other public and private groups,
 - o establishing tipster/hotline program,
 - o establishing public awareness and media campaigns, and
 - o establishing liaison with the legislators to promote legislation which will provide disincentives to arsonists.
4. Approving and implementing programs such as:
 - o identifying sources of funding support,
 - o obtaining commitments from member agencies,
 - o identifying responsible agency for specific programs, and
 - o implementing programs.
5. Evaluating and revising, as necessary, mission and goals:
 - o assessing program objectives,
 - o determining program effectiveness and resource utilization, and
 - o examining, as necessary, program alternatives.

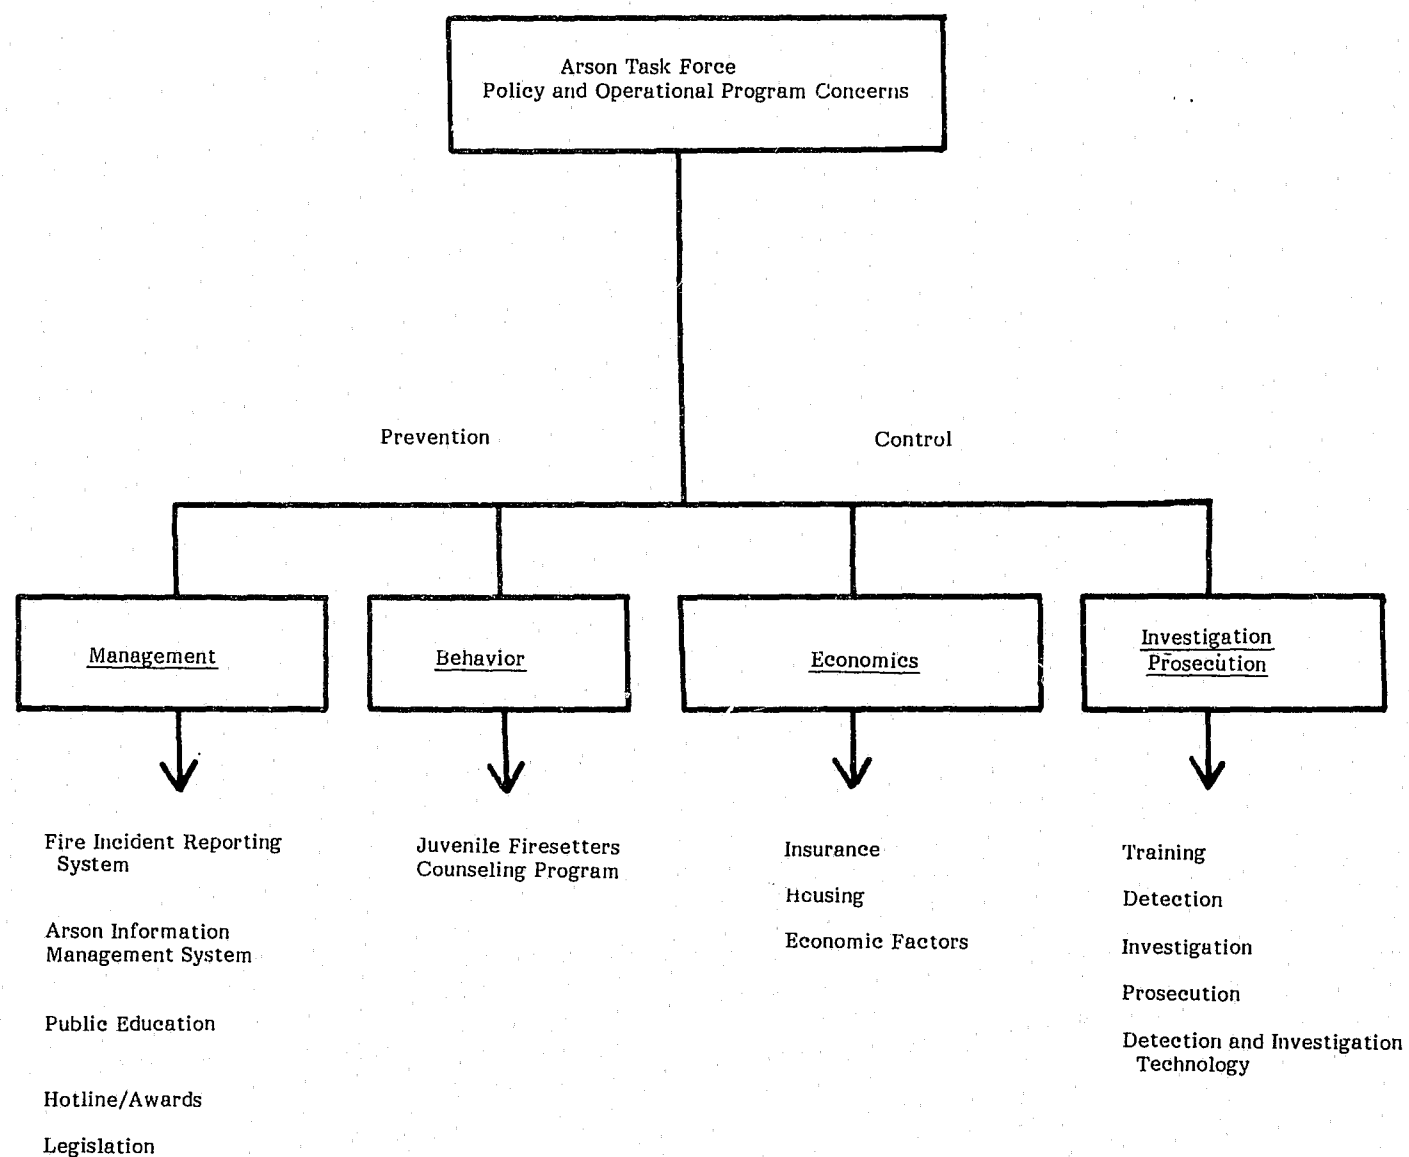

Program Implementation Responsibilities.

1. Forming an arson control unit,
2. Setting up mechanisms for arson data analysis and an arson information management system,
3. Increasing public awareness of arson problem,

4. Instituting hotline/tipster program,
5. Obtaining community participation,
6. Establishing training in detection, investigation and prosecution, and
7. Instituting a juvenile firesetters counseling program.

- Civic Organizations
- Chamber of Commerce
- Community Based Organizations
- Media
- Public at Large

STATEWIDE ARSON ORGANIZATIONS

The Statewide arson organization is both a concept and strategy. Its purpose is to control and prevent arson. Its concept is simple: mobilize State resources, public and private, coordinate responsibilities, and integrate efforts of agencies and groups who are involved or should be involved into an organized strategy. Statewide organizations are mostly policy oriented bodies. They set or recommend guidelines, and define lines of authority and responsibility for implementing programs.

Historically, the impetus for Statewide organizations began as efforts by the insurance industry to control arson which was depleting both public and private resources.* At first concentrating on public awareness, the industry began to join efforts with State and local fire services, law enforcement and other agencies, public and private. It made its resources available to help coordinate active programs and initiate new ones, such as arson "hotlines". Success of initial cooperative efforts and of arson task force approaches by Seattle, Houston, New York, and other cities suggested a task force approach to State campaigns against arson. Early productive efforts by Illinois, Michigan, Texas, and Ohio helped spread the concept to other States.

Concern with the alarming increase in arson and the accompanying heavy losses in life and property prompted the Offices of the Governor of several States to establish quasilegal arson task forces to examine arson problems and to develop Statewide strategies for its prevention and control. Technical assistance by FEMA and financial support by LEAA aided in implementation of the concept.

*In a few States, the Arson Advisory Organization is still solely an insurance industry activity.

ARSON SQUADS/UNITS

The growth in arson has persuaded and compelled jurisdictions to make cooperative arrangements among their public safety departments. Those who have not adopted the community-wide arson task force approach have instituted a system of close working relationships between the fire, police departments, and, frequently include the prosecutor's office. This arrangement is in the form of an arson squad or unit.

Historic practices often determine a community's response to the arson problem. In some localities, both the fire and police departments maintain their own arson squads. By tradition, fire departments are responsible for investigating cause and circumstances of fires. By tradition, police departments have had the responsibility to investigate the occurrences of crimes. Questions of responsibility as to who is to investigate arson most often arises when there are no clear, definitive regulations delegating authority to the fire or police departments. Fire department investigators without police power are severely handicapped in the arson situation. Similarly, police personnel without training and experience in detection of the origins and cause of fire are impaired in the investigation of arson.

Administratively, members belong to their respective departments; functionally, they operate as a unit but may be physically located in either department. In some jurisdictions, members of the arson squad operate cooperatively but separately. In some, fire department arson investigators receive police training and are given arrest and subpoena power. In turn, police members receive fire detection and investigation training. Ideally, the arson squad is comprised of members from all public safety departments, including the prosecutor's office, and operates as an organizational unit. The operational variations can be seen in the following listing.

ARSON DATA RESOURCES

Valid arson data are important and a necessary tool for communities, States, the Federal Government as well as the private sector in developing prevention and control strategies and tactics. Valid arson data can help to:

- o identify the nature of the arson problem;
- o identify high arson risk areas and structures;
- o identify individuals repeatedly involved in fires (owners, tenants, bystanders, arsonists);
- o investigate fires;
- o assist investigations through pattern analysis;
- o coordinate interdepartmental anti-arson activities;
- o allocate resources to high risk areas;
- o determine property losses, injuries, and deaths due to arson;
- o determine suppression and prevention costs;
- o project future needs;
- o develop prevention and control programs;
- o document budget needs; and
- o evaluate operations and programs.

Most State fire marshals and local fire prevention bureaus accumulate arson statistics among the fire data they record. There are several efforts in the public and private sectors helping States and local communities improve the collection and analysis of their arson data.

DIRECTORY OF SOURCES OF ARSON DATA

Federal Data Programs

The National Fire Data Center collects and analyzes data on national fire losses. Its Analysis and Management Division identifies statistics on arson incidents, arson related injuries and deaths, dollar losses, the types of properties most involved, etc. The National Fire Incident Reporting System helps States and local communities implement fire data processing systems which are used to collect, analyze, and track arson information, along with other data. (See page 63 through 72.)

Integrated Criminal Apprehension Program (ICAP) is a data system for police departments to record and analyze their daily operations. Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) believes ICAP has the potential to identify and correlate arson information from within its data base; therefore, LEAA is encouraging its participating police departments to work with fire departments to use ICAP to promote improved arson detection and investigation.

National Fire Incident Reporting System (NFIRS)

NFIRS assists State and local governments to upgrade their fire reporting and analysis capabilities and to obtain data which can be used on a national basis. Within a State, local fire departments complete an incident and casualty report as a fire occurs. Completed forms are forwarded to the State-level office where the data are validated and coded for input into a computer. These data are aggregated into Statewide reports which are sent to the National Fire Data Center, U. S. Fire Administration. Arson data are among those collected and analyzed by the NFIRS.

Property Insurance Loss Register (PILR) was developed by the American Insurance Association to serve as a tool in the investigation of claims by supplying fire loss histories of insured or fire damaged property. It is a computer data system which identifies or "flags" suspicious factors or patterns of fraud usually associated with arson-for-profit. If enough suspicious factors are disclosed by the computer analytical program, the information is forwarded to the insurance claims manager for any appropriate action.

ARSON INFORMATION MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS (AIMS)

For the past several years, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) has been concerned with the questions: Is it possible to prevent an arson fire from occurring? Or, once arson has occurred, can such future fires be predicted by identifying the patterns for revenge arsons, vandalism, pyromania, and other motives for incendiary incidents analogous to those in arson-for-profit? Can arson enabling factors be identified in the form of an Arson Early Warning System so that preventive measures can be taken?

As FEMA's programs addressing these questions progressed, it became apparent that there was a binding relationship between arson prevention strategies and the strategies arson investigators and prosecutors had to employ to uncover and present the evidence to indict and convict the arsonist. FEMA asked another question: Can an AIMS be developed for this very diverse and complex crime which will improve its prevention and control?

Toward this end, FEMA, through the U. S. Fire Administration, has supported pilot programs in the last several years with community organizations, fire and enforcement agencies to develop an arson information management system. The concept of an AIMS is beginning to materialize.

The model which is evolving clarifies enabling arson conditions, intervention strategies, post-incendiary detection, investigation, and prosecution activities. It is providing more effective arson prevention and control planning and management for community groups, arson task forces, insurance officials, banking and loan institutions, housing authorities, fire and law enforcement officials, prosecutors, members of the judiciary, correction officials, and communities at large.

ARSON PUBLIC EDUCATION

Local public arson education campaigns have proven to be effective tools in the fight against arson. A public arson education campaign involves informing the public of the seriousness of the crime and soliciting its involvement.

Methods of educating the public which have proven to be successful include:

- o News conferences held by a recognized city leader.
- o The issuing of press releases.
- o Newspaper articles and continued coverage.
- o Arson specials on television.
- o Lectures to civic, school, and community groups.

To involve the public, a tipster/hotline program with a reward fund is most commonly used. The program and its identifiable slogan and symbol are advertised through:

- o Television and radio public service announcement.
- o Billboards.
- o Signs on public transportation vehicles.
- o Newspaper and magazine ads.
- o Reward signs at sites of suspicious fires.
- o Flyers.

State Programs

State arson advisory committees employ various educational methods just previously mentioned. Among the more extensive public education campaigns being conducted are by the committees in the States listed below:

Tipster/Hotline Programs

Tipster/hotline programs solicit the help of the public in providing investigative leads to solving a particular arson case. The program consists of a telephone number, most often open on a 24-hour basis, which citizens can call with information pertaining to arson related fires.

The majority of hotline programs offer a reward to persons providing tips. Rewards range from small amounts to larger sums for information which leads directly to the arrest of a firesetter.

Most of the tipster/hotline programs are Statewide but local organizations have also begun to initiate programs. Many of these programs receive funding from the insurance industry. Tipster/hotline programs are in effect in the following cities and States:

Audio-Visual Presentations

Films and slide/tape presentations are being developed by fire, insurance, communication, and educational organizations. These media devices serve a number of purposes. They educate the public about the arson problem; they are used in training arson investigators; and, in the case of the Los Angeles Juvenile Firesetters videotape, they provide a full discussion of and instruction on how to conduct a counseling program.

ANTI-ARSON NEIGHBORHOOD ORGANIZATIONS

Neighborhood organizations in areas feeling the worst brunt of the arson problem have become an effective factor in fighting this crime. The survival of their community and personal lives, they have found, depends on a systematic, organized effort by the neighborhood. Many such organizations have achieved results which are saving their neighborhoods and community. Listed below, by State and locality, are neighborhood organizations with anti-arson programs. Also included is a matrix identifying the range of anti-arson activities of these groups.

ARSON LEGISLATION

States currently operate under an array of widely divergent arson statutes, other laws relevant to arson, and case law. States even disagree on the definition of arson. Differences among States create a confusing legal situation. However, efforts are currently being made to change existing statutes or introduce new "model" laws more effectively to combat arson. The annual National Legislative Conference on Arson is an attempt by State legislators to examine actions and specific legislation needed by States to control the crime of arson.

Legislation can work to provide disincentives to arsonists, although sometimes it inadvertently helps arsonists escape detection and prosecution. Legislators are beginning to examine State laws relevant to arson. Some improvement has taken place through sharpening the language by eliminating verbose and vague expressions, however, the success of a State's laws to prevent and control arson depends on three general factors:

Economic Disincentives

This is exemplified by laws related to insurance:

- o Some insurance laws which are designed to protect insurance consumers may actually constrain arson investigation by restricting the flow of information between insurance companies and law enforcement officials. Most States now have adopted laws that provide immunity to insurance companies, thus permitting them to provide information to law enforcement officers.
- o Some State laws provide punitive damage if insurance claims are not settled within a limited time. This works to the advantage of the arsonist who commits the crime for profit. In some States, revisions of such provisions are being made.

Penal Disincentives

This is exemplified by new provisions in the penal code:

- o Revisions of arson penal codes are taking place to make penalties commensurate with the severity of the crime. It is felt in some States that the penalties are too light to serve as effective deterrents. With arson now considered a Part I crime, some States are beginning to revise penal statutes. Remnants of common law in penal codes in some States restrict effective arson prosecution because burning of one's own property is not considered a crime. State legislatures are examining this situation and are considering corrective action.
- o Revisions of the language of and definitions within laws dealing with arson are being made to clarify their intent, thus enabling more effective prosecution and sentencing of arsonists.

Incentives to Improve Participatory Management of State Agencies to Combat Arson

This is exemplified by:

- o Some States are passing legislation to encourage cooperation by and mobilization of their agencies to combat arson. Such legislation clarifies responsibilities and provides resources for anti-arson programs.

ARSON

II. PROGRAMS AND RESOURCES FOR INVESTIGATION/PROSECUTION OF ARSON

II. PROGRAMS AND RESOURCES FOR INVESTIGATION/PROSECUTION OF ARSON

Many fires are not recognized as set fires and are simply assumed to be of accidental origin. Lack of detection permits the arsonist to remain at liberty to set other fires. In most cases in the past, the firesetter was never apprehended. In those instances when an arsonist was apprehended, prosecution frequently failed because arson is one of the most difficult crimes to prove. The visible evidence of incendiarism often is destroyed by the fire. Proof of arson almost always depends upon circumstantial or indirect evidence. Its validity, in the past, was often successfully challenged in the court.

The lack of success in prosecution was due to such factors as:

firefighters, first on the scene, were untrained to detect the incendiary nature of the fire;

fire investigators who might have been called — inadequate in number and often in training — lacked time and experience fully to detect, accumulate, and preserve evidence;

prosecutors, also inexperienced with arson and having overburdened caseloads, shied away from what they considered difficult cases to win.

Since accurate detection and competent investigation of incendiary fires are the first steps to a successful prosecution and deterrence of arson, the lack of adequately trained staff to perform these functions has been a factor in arson's being called the easiest crime to commit without fear of punishment.

Communities and organizations, alarmed by their arson problem, are recognizing that there is a need to improve the competency of firefighters, investigators, and prosecutors in order to contain and deter the problem. The listings which follow identify some of these education and training efforts.

Listed first are Federal training efforts. This is followed by training programs in States; then those at colleges and universities are listed; and finally, programs aimed at prosecuting attorneys are indicated.

TRAINING PROGRAMS

Federal Training Efforts

National Fire Academy
National Emergency Management Training
Center
Federal Emergency Management Agency

The National Fire Academy, Emmitsburg, Maryland, offers the following training courses in arson detection and investigation:

Fire/Arson Investigation

Fire/Arson Investigation provides training for personnel responsible for the investigation of fire-related incidents. The course has an in-depth approach and is intended for full-time professionals; it covers methods of conducting legal investigation into all aspects of fire so as to culminate in the successful prosecution of arson.

The course includes both classroom learning and "hands on" training, acquired from arson laboratory burn scenes examinations, and case development.

Course duration: 15 days.

Fire/Arson Detection

Fire/Arson Detection is designed to identify effective methods of arson detection.

Intended for fire service administrators and firefighter trainers, the course covers determining the point of origin of a fire, discriminating between accidental and incendiary fire causes, handling operations at the fire scene, collection and preservation of evidence, and recording information for support of later arson investigation.

Course duration: 5 days.

BUREAU OF ALCOHOL, TOBACCO AND FIREARMS*

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF), conducts training sessions focusing on arson-for-profit. The curriculum covers: arson-for-profit investigation techniques, laws related to arson, and the role of the crime lab in arson investigations. Information on these training sessions may be obtained from:

State Arson Training Programs

The serious annual losses due to arson is testimony that training in arson detection and investigation have been inadequate. Training strengths and adequacy vary from State-to-State and often within localities of the States. Where metropolitan areas have fire or police training academies, fire and arson investigation courses occur. Lack of training is most critical in rural areas, but it is also often inadequate to meet growing needs in urban centers.

Responsibility for training in States is usually the function of the State fire training director and/or the State fire marshal. In cities with training academies, fire/arson investigation courses are often part of the training curriculum. The expertise to provide competent training is not always available. This situation is even more critical for smaller and rural communities.

Although training is primarily a local responsibility, the National Fire Academy (NFA) has developed an arson investigation training package consisting of an instructor's manual, slides, and student workbook. The NFA has distributed reproduction copies to the fire marshal and to the fire training director of each State for purposes of dissemination and development of local programs. The Academy, both through an outreach program and through its Emmitsburg facility, has and is providing training for State and local trainers.

In the listing that follows, no attempt has been made to identify local course programs or seminars. Instead, we have identified State Fire Marshals and State Training Directors, both of whom have, minimally, recourse to the NFA training package. Programs often are conducted cooperatively between the resources of these State offices. For information on arson training courses and seminars, the State Fire Marshal and State Training Director should be contacted. Training, however, more often is based on demand and is done regionally in the field.

*The status of ATF as this Directory went to press, is uncertain. It is believed its arson functions will be continued in the Secret Service.

Prosecutor Training

Prosecutors have an important role to play in curbing arson and punishing the arsonist. The fact that many prosecutors in the past have been reticent to file arson charges and try arson cases has been due to a lack of familiarity with the crime and how to prosecute arsonists successfully. Now, as their understanding of arson has increased, prosecutors have become active in fighting the crime in the courts, by serving on arson task forces, and by mobilizing appropriate agencies to develop anti-arson strategies.

State district attorney organizations are taking a leading role in developing training programs to enable prosecutors to be more effective in prosecuting the arsonist.

TECHNOLOGY

Laboratory Equipment

The major instrument used by forensic laboratories in analyzing evidence in an arson case is a gas chromatograph, an instrument designed to separate components of a mixture.

Briefly, the evidence sample is entered into a column of the machine in which it undergoes a separation of components. It then passes through a detector system connected to a recorder which records a pattern on paper, reflecting the chemical components of the sample. This record is called a chromatogram and is compared with other chromatograms of known components. The object is to try and match the chromatogram in order to determine the content of the sample tested, thus detecting the source of ignition or accelerant present.

Additional instruments such as spectrometers and spectrophotometers may also be used. These instruments are analytical and detection devices.

The following is a list of equipment manufacturers from whom we have received responses. The listings below do not constitute an endorsement of any product or manufacturer. The listings are provided for purposes of information only. The Arson Resource Center welcomes information from other manufacturers of arson detection equipment for future editions of the Arson Resource Directory.

Portable Equipment

While gas chromatographs are used in the laboratory, portable gas chromatographs or "sniffers" may be taken to the scene of the fire. This sensitive instrument tests the toxic and combustible levels of hydrocarbons and vapors. A hose is attached to the front of the instrument, then inserted into the area to be tested. There are three basic types of detection: (1) catalytic oxidation of vapors for current sensing, (2) flame ionization of vapors for current sensing, and (3) photoionization of vapors for current sensing. In some of these instruments, if the meter reading of the tested area reaches the alarm point, a visible light or audible sound will continue as long as the area being tested is above the alarm point.

The following manufacturers of portable "sniffers" have provided information to the Directory. This listing does not constitute an endorsement of products or manufacturer but is provided for information purposes only.

Forensic Laboratories

Forensic laboratories perform an important service in helping investigators establish physical evidence of an arson fire. These laboratories perform scientific examination of flammable liquids, gas samples, fire debris, fire bombs, and other physical evidence involved in suspicious fires. Even though fire may destroy 99 percent of incendiary evidence, properly equipped and staffed laboratories can often determine the type of accelerant, incendiary device, or explosives used by analyzing the most minute particles of submitted evidence.

Equipment in the laboratories includes gas chromatographs, infrared spectrophotometers, and other instruments which analyze solids, liquids, gaseous substances, and other evidence, including fingerprint impressions.

After analysis of submitted evidence, laboratory personnel issue written reports on their findings and opinions. Laboratory personnel are also called upon to serve as "expert" witnesses in prosecution cases of arsonists.

Listed below are forensic laboratories which provide analysis of physical evidence submitted from fires of suspected arsons. Laboratories are arranged alphabetically by State and locality. Federal laboratories are identified by an asterisk.

III. PROGRAMS CONCERNED WITH ECONOMIC FACTORS IN ARSON

The economic aspects of arson are complex. There have been spectacular large-scale insurance frauds in which arson-fraud rings -- at times mafia connected -- have bought property at low market costs, where real estate values are unstable. These rings then "milked" the building for all it was worth by charging the highest rents possible, paying no taxes, and making no repairs until the tenants moved out. During this period, the property was transferred several times between fake or "straw" owners in order to raise the "apparent" value of the building on paper. The building was insured for the new paper value. Finally, the ring burned the building to collect insurance proceeds. In Boston, one ring consisted of 33 members including lawyers, bankers, insurers, real estate agents, investigators, etc.

Small scale fraud, although less spectacular, probably occurs far more frequently. This type of arson might involve a kitchen fire set to obtain insurance funds to remodel, or an automobile fire as a means of getting rid of a gas guzzler in order to obtain insurance funds for a new compact.

Indirect profits are also incentives for arson. Here, the main goal is not simply to obtain the insurance proceeds, but arson to facilitate the expansion of a business to an adjacent lot, or to clean a lot more cheaply than through demolition.

In the past, the insurance industry accepted arson losses as one of the expenses of underwriting fire insurance. The upsurge in arson-for-profit has prompted the industry to vigorous arson prevention and control actions, because the "profit" in arson-for-profit is derived from insurance money. An Insurance Committee for Arson Control (ICAC) has been established by the major insurance trade associations and some individual insurance companies. This Committee established a prospectus for action in the form of a document entitled, Target: Arson. The Committee has identified six broad categories of concern:

1. Promotion of the arson task force concept in States and localities.
2. Promotion of training and education in arson detection and investigation.
3. Promotion of improved data collection and arson statistics.
4. Encouragement of legislative action to help curb arson.
5. Promotion of public relations and public awareness for improving arson prevention and control.
6. Encouragement of funding of activities for arson prevention and control.

ICAC also has established programmatic subcommittees. The Committee and its subcommittees are excellent information resources on insurance related matters.

FAIR Plans

The FAIR (Fair Access to Insurance Requirements) Plans were established as an outgrowth of the inner-city disturbances of 1967 and 1968.

FAIR Plans are private property insurance pools. They are designed to make essential property insurance available in areas, primarily urban, where such insurance is unavailable through the standard market because of environmental conditions surrounding the specific properties. The Federal Insurance Administration (FIA) is responsible for examining the operations and activities of State regulated FAIR Plans.

Though FIA's responsibility has primarily revolved around the questions of availability of such coverage, more and more concentration has been devoted to the problem of arson, especially economic arson.

One area of confusion in the FAIR Plans' approach to the arson problem has been the degree of underwriting flexibility available to FAIR Plans under Federal regulations. Although the plans, unlike some of the voluntary markets, cannot use the criterion of geographic location to deny coverage to an insurance applicant, they use underwriting criteria based on the physical conditions of a property or relevant characteristics of ownership to establish insurance eligibility.

FIA has revised the regulations governing the FAIR Plans to dispel possible confusion and to clarify the range of underwriting measures which can be used when signs of possible arson begin to appear. The new measures include the use of a five-day cancellation or a denial of coverage for reasons such as:

- o extensive vacancy,
- o failure to provide utilities,
- o serious tax arrearage,
- o building abandonment,
- o conviction or unresolved indictment for arson, and
- o multiple fires.

States having FAIR Plans are indicated in the list that follows:

The Property Loss Research Bureau (PLRB) is an affiliate of the Alliance of American Insurers. It is a non-profit association of 100 insurance companies and acts as an educational, investigative, and consultative agency on property loss matters. A principle service of the PLRB is the provision of countrywide arson teams staffed by professional investigators. For information, contact:

Juvenile Firesetters Program

Although estimates vary considerably, most experts agree that intentionally set fires caused by juveniles are comparatively high and represent a serious problem. The fire service interest in youthful firesetting is obvious. Fire departments are often the first to become aware of the juvenile firesetter, and many find themselves ill-equipped to handle the situation. Besides extinguishing and investigating fires juveniles set, they are thrust into interviewing suspected firesetters, counseling them and their families, and making recommendations about prosecution.

In the last several years, many fire departments have realized the urgency of the juvenile firesetter problem. Some, believing that any action on their part was better than no action at all, began to develop pragmatic programs with the help of psychologists, mental health care specialists, educators, and other professionals. The success of these programs has brought a significant reduction not only in the number of juvenile firesetters but also much satisfaction, fulfillment, and social benefit to the firefighter, the juvenile's family, and the community. FEMA in cooperation with the Los Angeles County Fire Department has developed a manual for interviewing and counseling juvenile firesetters. This manual is being widely used by fire departments countrywide. Fire departments having juvenile firesetters counseling programs are listed below.

OTHER ANTI-ARSON
RESOURCE ORGANIZATIONS

OTHER ANTI-ARSON RESOURCE ORGANIZATIONS

The fight to curb arson has mobilized the resources of a large and varied grouping of private and public organizations. In this section, the anti-arson concerns and activities of these organizations are briefly described, with addresses and key contacts listed.

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ARSON INVESTIGATORS (IAAI)

The IAAI is a professional society of investigators, public and private persons engaged in the control of arson and kindred crimes. Its purpose is to advance the professional standards of arson investigators, cooperate with law enforcement agencies, and to exchange technical information and developments in prevention and control of arson. Listed below are its officers and chapter presidents who may be contacted about IAAI activities:

FEDERAL AGENCIES WITH PROGRAMS FOR REDUCING ARSON

As this edition of the Directory is being prepared, Federal departments, in compliance with directions from the Office of Management and Budget, are examining their missions, consolidating their efforts, and are adopting the approach that unless a Federal law is broke, arson is mainly the concern of States, localities, and the appropriate private sector.

This approach, commonly termed, "Federalism" does not mean that agencies within the Government are ignoring the country's arson problem. On the contrary, as the problem impinges on the agency's mission, anti-arson efforts and programs are continued but are geared toward assisting State and local initiatives in arson prevention, control, investigation and prosecution. When Federal laws are broken such as involvement by organized crime in arson frauds, use of explosive incendiary devices in arson, use of the United States mails in arson frauds, or the failure to report taxable income resulting from arson related activities, the investigative and prosecution arm of the Government will become involved, most often in response to requests by local jurisdictions. The key Federal agencies with anti-arson programs are listed in this section.

Federal Arson Task Force

Public Law 95-422 called upon FEMA's U. S. Fire Administration to maintain a Federal focus on arson prevention and control. To meet this responsibility, FEMA initiated the Federal Arson Task with bimonthly meetings. The purpose of the Task Force is to provide communication channels to help coordinate and enhance arson prevention and control programs and facilitate opportunities for leveraging cooperative funding.

Federal Emergency Management Agency

The Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) through its U. S. Fire Administration (USFA) is coordinating Federal assistance in arson prevention and control. It is conducting training programs in arson detection and investigation, developing a municipal arson information management systems to predict, prevent, and control arson, compiling national arson statistics, assisting in establishment of arson task forces throughout the nation, developing juvenile firesetter counseling programs, analyzing ways of removing the economic incentives to arson, and operating an Arson Resource Center. (See pages 227 and 228.)

FEMA's Arson Resource Center

Mission: To serve as a national arson reference center, providing information to States and localities to help them prevent and control arson.

Special Objectives:

1. To develop an extensive informational resource on every aspect of arson, containing the timeliest literature, audio/visuals, and materials related to model arson prevention and control programs, training and arson legislation.
2. To identify users and their requirements for funneling needed information to help reduce the Nation's arson problem.
3. To serve as a reference center and clearinghouse to States and localities on arson programs, training, legislation and research.
4. To develop and maintain an Arson Resource Directory on persons, organizations and materials.
5. To publish an Arson Resource Exchange Bulletin, providing a current awareness of programs, resources, problems, trends, and legislation.
6. To respond to queries or provide reference sources of expertise where answers to arson problems may be found.
7. To develop and disseminate manuals and information packages to help States and localities prevent and control arson.

Publications Available from Arson Resource Center:

Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms*

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms investigates cases of arson involving explosive devices. It assists local law enforcement agencies through its national arson response teams, cooperates with Justice Department attorneys in the prosecution of arson, and provides training and laboratory assistance for analyzing crime scene evidence.

*As this Directory went to press, the ATF was scheduled for abolishment. It is anticipated that its arson activities will be transferred to the Treasury Department's Secret Service.

National Bureau of Standards

The arson-related activities of the National Bureau of Standards are carried out by the Center for Fire Research (CFR), and the Law Enforcement Standards Laboratory (LESL). CFR's programs include the development of psychological profiles of arsonists, handbooks to guide investigators in determining origin and cause of fires, reference standards for laboratory apparatus and technology for analysis of accelerant samples, and specifications for a more reliable portable accelerant detector ("sniffer"). The LESL is concerned with law enforcement technology and arson falls within its scope of interest.

FIELD DIVISIONS OF THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) enters the arson scene after a crime has been committed. It is involved in statistical reporting, investigation, supportive training, and laboratory analysis of evidence in arson cases.

The FBI's legal jurisdiction for investigating arson is dictated by two statutes aimed at curtailing organized crime —Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) and the Interstate Transportation in Aid of Racketeering. A recent legislative mandate also requires the FBI to include arson among its Uniform Crime Report Part I Crime Index Offenses.

Listed below, alphabetically, by State are the 59 Field Divisions of the FBI. These field offices provide training to law enforcement officers in arson detection and investigation and can aid in laboratory analysis of evidence. For information on training, contact the Divisional Training Coordinator.

REGIONAL AND FIELD OFFICES OF THE BUREAU OF ALCOHOL, TOBACCO AND FIREARMS

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) has jurisdictional authority to combat the arson problem at the Federal level and to assist State and local authorities. Its major function is to investigate violations and to enforce Federal statutes which prohibit the use of explosives and other destructive devices commonly used by arsonists.

The thrust of ATF's enforcement approach to arson is directed toward:

Investigation of major "arson-for-profit" crimes (involving commercial/industrial, interstate activities) perpetrated by organized crime, white collar criminals, "arson rings" and violent criminals.

Investigative assistance to State/local enforcement agencies experiencing a significant arson problem, especially when the nature/magnitude of the identified problem exceeds the jurisdiction or resource capability of such agencies.

Promotion of the "task force" approach to combat the arson problem (i.e., coordinated, cooperative efforts by Federal, State, and local authorities to investigate major arson crimes.)

Training of State/local and other Federal agencies in the detection and investigation of complex "arson-for-profit" schemes. The training is designed to enhance the investigator's ability to deal effectively with arson crimes and to support law enforcement's continuing fight against crime and violence.

ATF has also established four National Response Teams. Each team consists of 10 special agents, plus laboratory and technical support personnel. These teams can provide a 24-hour response to any location in the country to assist in the investigation of explosives or arson related incidents of extreme major proportions.

Listed on the following pages are the four regional ATF offices and 29 field offices to whom requests for information and assistance should be addressed.

*As the Directory went to press, the ATF was scheduled for abolishment. It is anticipated that its arson activities will be transferred to the Treasury Department's Secret Service.

ARSON RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT RESOURCES

These are a diverse group of organizations who do research and development in arson prevention and control. Membership includes the public and private sectors with much work being done by contract research and development organizations, public interest groups, academic institutions, and private consultants. Because problems in the prevention and control of arson intersect various types of research and development activities, most often, organizations working in fire prevention and control will pursue an arson research and development activity, and many have contributed significantly to the field. Research and development resources are listed alphabetically.

Editorial Note

The purpose of this Directory is to help you to gain convenient access to persons and organizations with expertise in problems related to arson. It was prepared, in the main, from responses to requests for information from resources listed. I want to express the Federal Emergency Management Agency's and my gratitude to the many organizations and individuals who provided the information for this Directory. If the Directory contains errors of commission or omission, we would appreciate your reporting the matter to us. Please send us suggestions on how future editions of the Arson Resource Directory might serve you better.
