Report Description

The Management and Administrative Statistics (MAS) report presents data relevant to criminal justice resources and expenditures in the State of Alaska. Its purpose is to show how government funds are distributed to the different government agencies and budget categories and then show in detail how the JUSTICE category resources are distributed.

The report contains a description of each criminal justice agency as found in the State Statutes, the number and type of employees, the expenditures and funding for FY's 1977-1981, the capacities of local jails and correctional institutions, and the size of local police departments.

The bulk of the data was gathered from the Free Conference Reports for FY's 1977-1981 and the Appropriated Personnel Budget Report. Data which was gathered from other sources is footnoted.

On page 77, there is a glossary which defines terms used, such as personnel services, travel, F.C.C., etc.

State of Alaska
Expenditures and Funding
FY 1975-1981

This section contains several tables which show how the State of Alaska's budget was distributed between FY 1975-1981.

The data is broken down first by Budget Category and then by governmental agency. The dollar amount and percentage distribution are shown for each breakdown.

Basically, this data shows that the Justice budget category has received between eight and five percent of the State's budget during the FY 1975-1981 period.

When the data is looked at agency by agency, we find that the budget distribution has been relatively consistent over the last seven years. Those agencies receiving the greatest proportion of the budget are Education (23%), Health and Social Services (15%), Transportation and Public Facilities (10%), and University of Alaska (10%).

This data was taken from the Executive Budgets FY 1975-1981, Division of Budget and Management, Office of the Governor.

Public Defender Agency

Establishment and Administration

The Public Defender Agency has been established in the Department of Administration to serve the needs of indigent defendants.

The agency is administered by the Public Defender.

Appointment and Term

The governor appoints the Public Defender from among two or more persons nominated for the position by the Judicial Council. The appointment is subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session.

The Public Defender shall serve a term of four years. The governor may decide to retain the Public Defender for another term without calling for nomination from the Judicial Council. The retention must be approved, however, by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session.

Eligibility

In order to be eligible for the positions of Public Defender or Assistant Public Defender, a person must be admitted to the practice of law in this state, or with the approval of the Board of Governors of the Alaska Bar Association, in another state.

Private Practice Prohibited

The public defender and assistant public defenders may not engage in the practice of law except in their official capacities in the agency.

ALASKA COURT SYSTEM

The Alaska Court System is the Judicial Branch of the State government, separate and distinct from the Executive and Legislative Branches. It is one of the first and perhaps the most completely unified state court system in the United States. Under this system the judicial power of the state is vested in the Supreme Court, with the Chief Justice serving as the administrative head of the Court System. An Administrative Director is appointed by the Chief Justice with the concurrence of the Supreme Court and assists the Chief Justice in supervising the administration of all courts in the state.

There are four levels of courts in the Alaska Court System consisting of two appellate courts, the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals, and a two-tiered trial court, the Superior and District Courts. Title 22 of the Alaska Statutes establishes jurisdiction and other areas of judicial responsibility for each level of court. The Supreme Court maintains ultimate control over the administrative policies of the court, promulgating rules governing the administration of all courts, and rules of practice and procedure for civil and criminal cases.

The Supreme Court and the Superior Court were established by the Constitution of the State of Alaska. The District Court and the Court of Appeals were created by the Alaska State Legislature, established by statute. The Court of Appeals is the most recent level, having been created in 1980.

Supreme Court

The Supreme Court is comprised of the Chief Justice and four associate justices. To be eligible for appointment to the Supreme Court, a person must be a citizen of the United States and a resident of Alaska for three years prior to appointment. A justice must be licensed to practice law in the state at the time of appointment and have engaged in the active practice of law for eight years. All appointments are made by the Governor within 45 days of receipt of nominations from the Alaska Judicial Council. Each justice is subject to approval or rejection by a majority of the voters of the state on a non-partisan ballot at the first general election held more than three years after appointment, and every tenth year thereafter. If rejected by the voters, a Justice may not be appointed to fill any vacancy on the Supreme Court or Superior Court for four years. The Chief Justice is selected from among the justices by a majority vote. He holds office for three years and may not serve consecutive terms.

The Supreme Court hears appellate matters from every location in the state and its work is not directly affected by judicial district boundaries.

Superior Court

The Superior Court is the trial court of general jurisdiction with original jurisdiction in all civil and criminal matters. The Superior Court has concurrent jurisdiction in all other judicial matters with the District Court. The Superior Court may issue injunctions and writs of habeas corpus, review, and mandamus, and serves as an appellate court for appeals from the District Court. Appeals to the Superior Court from final judgments of the District Court are a matter of right.

The Superior Court has exclusive jurisdiction in all domestic relations matters, children's proceedings, probate, guardianship, and civil commitments.

The Chief Justice designates a presiding judge in each judicial district to serve a term of one year. The presiding judge, in addition to his regular judicial duties, is responsible for the administration of the trial courts within his district, including the assignment of cases, the supervision of court personnel, the efficient handling of court business, and the appointment of the magistrates. A Superior Court judge may be temporarily assigned anywhere in the State by the Chief Justice up to 90 days per year. He may be assigned for longer periods with the judge's acquiescence.

The qualifications of a judge of the Superior Court are the same as for a Supreme Court justice, except that only five years active practice is necessary. Each Superior Court judge is subject to approval or rejection by the voters of his judicial district at appointment. Thereafter, he is subject to approval or rejection every sixth year. He is subject to retirement for incapacity and may retire voluntarily at any time. Retired judges may render further service on the bench under a special assignment pro tempore. The Chief Justice may appoint a voluntarily retired judge to serve as judge or justice pro tempore for specified periods of time.

District Court

District Court Judges. The Alaska Constitution provides that the Legislature shall establish such lower or inferior courts as may be necessary. The Legislature has created a District Court for each judicial district, and has granted to the Supreme Court the power to increase or decrease the number of District Court judges within each judicial district.

In criminal matters, the District Court judge has jurisdiction over all State misdemeanor violations and violations of ordinances of political subdivisions. He may issue warrants as prescribed by law, and acts as examining magistrate in arraignments in criminal proceedings, which must occur within 24 hours after arrest. The District Court judge may also perform such non-judicial related tasks as issuing absentee ballots and recording vital statistics. He may also serve as coroner, hold inquests, and act as the conservator of property for deceased persons.

In civil matters, the District Court judge may hear cases for recovery of money or damages not exceeding $10,000 and for recovery of specific personal property when the value claimed for damages does not exceed $10,000. In motor vehicle tort cases, the civil jurisdiction in District Court is $15,000. A District Court judge may handle small claims actions up to $1,000, give judgment without action upon the confession of the defendant, foreclose liens where the amount in controversy does not exceed $10,000, and temporarily detain minors in emergencies. The criminal and civil jurisdiction of the District Court extends over the whole state.

A District Court judge must be 21 years of age, a citizen of the United States, a resident of the State for at least one year, and licensed to practice law in Alaska. Vacancies are filled by appointment of the Governor through nomination by the Judicial Council. The presiding judge may appoint one or more acting District Court judges as needed. An acting District Court judge need not be licensed to practice law.

District Court judges may be temporarily assigned to different places within the judicial district by the presiding judge or to another judicial district by the Chief Justice. A District Court judge, like other judges and justice, may not practice law or engage in any other profession or business for profit, nor may he hold office in a political party or unit of government involving compensation. If he files for elective office, he forfeits his judicial position.

Court of Appeals

In March of 1980, Governor Jay Hammond signed into law the bill creating the new Alaska Court of Appeals. The Legislature created the Court of Appeals to relieve the Supreme Court's workload.

The Court of Appeals has authority in criminal and quasi-criminal matters (juvenile delinquency, probation, habeas corpus). In criminal actions, the Supreme Court has the discretion to either accept or deny litigants' requests that it review decisions made by the Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court may also take jurisdiction of a criminal case pending before the Court of Appeals if the Court of Appeals certifies that the case involves a significant question of constitutional law or an issue of substantial public interest.

Appeals of District Court judgments in criminal cases may be taken to the Superior Court or to the Court of Appeals, at the Defendant's option. A defendant who appeals his case from District to Superior Court can ask the Court of Appeals to review the resulting decision of the Superior Court but the court of Appeals may, in its discretion, refuse to hear the appeal. If the defendant chooses to appeal a District Court judgment directly to the Court of Appeals, bypassing the Superior Court, the Court of Appeals must hear the appeal. The Supreme Court continues to have complete appellate authority in civil actions.

The Court of Appeals consists of three members, appointed by the Governor within 45 days of receipt of nomination by the Judicial Council. Eligibility requirements are similar to those of a Supreme Court Justice, except that a person must have been a resident of Alaska for five years prior to appointment, rather than three years.

Each Court of Appeals judge is subject to approval or rejection in a general election. If rejected by the voters, the person may not, for a period of four years thereafter, be appointed to fill any vacancy in the Supreme Court, the Court of Appeals, or the Superior or District Courts of the State.

A judge of the Court of Appeals may not practice law, hold office in a political party or otherwise engage in conduct for profit which would interfere with the performance of judicial duties.

Magistrates. In the smaller, generally rural areas of the State, where the services of full-time District Court judge are not required, magistrate posts have been created. They have been created in metropolitan areas as well to handle routine matters and ease the workload of the District Court.

The magistrate is a judicial officer of the District Court, whose authority is more limited than the District Court judge. In civil cases, the magistrate may award damages up to $1,000; issue summonses, writs of habeas corpus, and marriage licenses; enforce orders and judgments of the Superior Court; perform the duties of coroner (including inquests) and notary public; record vital statistics such as births, deaths, and marriages; and issue absentee ballots. He also has emergency authority in children's matters.

In criminal matters, he may give judgment of conviction upon a plea of guilty to any State misdemeanor. He may hear, try, and enter judgment in State misdemeanors if the defendant agrees in writing to be tried by the magistrate. He may also hear municipal ordinance violations without consent of the accused and impose sentence. In felony preliminary examinations, the magistrate may set, receive, and forfeit bail, and bind persons over to the Superior Court in the same manner as a District judge. Finally, he may issue warrants of arrest, summonses, and search warrants.

The qualifications of a magistrate or that the individual be 21 years old, a United States citizen, and a resident of Alaska for six months prior to appointment, which is made for an indefinite period by the presiding judge of the judicial district in which he will serve. The magistrate serves at the pleasure of the presiding judge.
