This fourteenth issue of this report documents twenty-one years of the death sentencing of female offenders under modern death penalty statutes in the United States. In 1988 I began to generate these reports in order to monitor this phenomenon. With the gracious assistance of so many people, more and more errors are edited out with each edition so that the data reported in each issue is intended to replace any inconsistent data reported in an earlier issue.

Both the female death sentencing rate and the female death row population remain very small in comparison to that for males. Actual execution of female offenders is quite rare, with only 511 documented instances beginning with the first in 1632. These 511 female executions constitute less than 3% of the total of approximately 18,585 confirmed executions since 1608. The last female offender executed was Velma Barfield in North Carolina on November 2, 1984, the only female among the 199 offenders executed in the post-Furman era (1973 - 1993). The annual rate of death sentences for female offenders has remained around 5 (or 2% of the annual total) for many years.

FEMALE DEATH SENTENCES IMPOSED, 1973 - 1993:

The current American death penalty era began when new death penalty statutes were passed following the Supreme Court's decision in Furman in 1972, which in effect struck down all then-existing death penalty statutes. Sentencing began under the new statutes in 1973 and continues through today. Although the constitutionality of these current era statutes was not recognized formally by the United States Supreme Court until 1976 in Gregg and actual executions did not begin until 1977, the current era of sentencing began in 1973.

Table 1 on the next page lists the sentences imposed each year according to the Bureau of Justice Statistics and to my research. A total of 99 female death sentences have been imposed, only 2% of the total of about 5,042 death sentences for all offenders. Despite some fluctuations particularly in the early years of this period, the death sentencing rate for female offenders was typically about 5 per year beginning in the 1980s.

In 1989 this annual death sentencing rate doubled for reasons unknown. In 1990 and 1991, the sentencing rate seemed to have returned to just above the pre-1989 levels. Then the rate surged to 10 in 1992, portending an annual rate again nearly double that of the 1980s. This is apparently about 4% of the death sentences imposed in 1992, suggesting that a significant increase in the rate of the death sentencing of female offenders may be occurring. However, 4 of these 10 female death sentences in 1992 were imposed on the same person (Aileen Wuornos, Florida), leaving only 6 other female death sentences during 1992. Total female death sentences then returned to normal levels -- 4 in 1993. In any event, the number of female offenders sentenced to prison death rows each year remains only 0.2% to 0.3% of the approximately 3,700 women sentenced to prison each year.

**Estimates

Of these 99 death sentences for female offenders, only 38 sentences (imposed upon 35 females) remain currently in effect (see Table 2 below). One such sentence resulted in an execution (Velma Barfield) and the other 60 death sentences were reversed or commuted to life imprisonment. Thus, for the 61 death sentences finally resolved (excluding the 38 still in effect and still being litigated), the reversal rate for female death sentences in the current era is over 98% (60/61).

These 99 death sentences for female offenders have been imposed in 23 individual states, comprising well over half of the death penalty jurisdictions during this time period. Table 2 lists all death penalty jurisdictions which have imposed death sentences on female offenders since 1973.

As Table 2 indicates, two states (Florida and North Carolina) account for over one quarter of all such sentences. The first ten states have imposed three quarters of female death sentences. These dominant sentencing states range from North Carolina to California and from Texas and Florida to Ohio.

Appendix A to this report (pp. 7-11) provides a more detailed listing of name, race, jurisdiction, dates of crimes and sentences, and current status for each female death sentence. While the sources of this information are many, the major sources are the outstanding data gathering effort of the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc. (particularly their newsletter, Death Row, U.S.A.), and the equally fine monitoring effort of the National Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty.

CURRENT FEMALE DEATH ROW INMATES:

Of the 99 death sentences imposed upon 93 female offenders since 1973, only 35 females remain on the death rows of 14 states (see Table 3). These 35 female offenders on death row constitute only 1.3% of the total death row population of 2,785 and only 0.07% of the approximately 50,000 women in prison in the United States.

Most of the women on death row are white. One fourth were in their forties or older at the time of their crimes, with the total age range remarkably from 18 to 67. Over two-thirds of their victims were white and two-thirds were adult males (where these data are known). About one-third of these cases involved the murder of the offender's husband or lover. Several of these female offenders were battered women who killed their batterers or victims chosen by their batterers.

The present ages of these 35 female death row inmates range from 21 to 73. They have been on death row from 6 months to nearly 12 years. Despite the statistically high probability (over 98%) that death-sentenced female offenders will never be executed, some of these women have nearly exhausted their appeals. Another execution of a female offender seems likely within the next few years.

Appendix B to this report (pp. 12-15) sets forth the names of these offenders and some brief details about their crimes and sentences. Multiple sentencing dates mean that the earlier death sentence was reversed but then a new death sentence was imposed.
