While the sentencing to death of juvenile offenders has been fairly consistent over the past two decades, the actual execution of such offenders has been much more sporadic. However, the 1990s may be ushering in an increase in actual executions of juvenile offenders. One juvenile offender was executed in 1990, another in 1992, and four during the last six months of 1993. These six executions of juvenile offenders comprise two-thirds of all juvenile offender executions in the entire period following resumption of capital punishment in 1973. In contrast, and perhaps reflecting the sporadic nature of such execution patterns, no juvenile offenders were executed in 1994 or thus far in 1995. During this same recent period, Florida made national and international headlines with high profile homicide arrests of juveniles, some as young as thirteen. In the past decade, homicide arrests of adults have risen about 25%. In that same period, homicide arrests of juveniles have risen about 170%.

More than a few observers of this recent wave of juvenile homicide have announced that the death penalty for juvenile offenders is or should be the American people's solution of choice for this criminal justice nightmare. The spate of 1990s executions of juvenile offenders seems to suggest that they are right. However, the data compiled in this report suggest these prognosticators are not correct as to death sentencing of juvenile offenders, at least not yet. In fact, a juvenile arrested for homicide today is apparently no more likely to be sentenced to death than in the past.

This forty-seventh issue of this report documents over twenty-two years of juvenile death sentencing under modern death penalty statutes in the United States.<sup>1</sup> Consistent with the general pattern over this twenty-two-year period, both the annual juvenile death sentencing rate and the juvenile death row population remain very small in comparison to that for adults, each being about 1% and 2% of the totals.<sup>2</sup> The spiraling number of arrests of juveniles for potentially capital crimes has resulted neither in a comparable rise in juvenile death sentencing nor a rise in the number of juvenile offenders on death row.

<sup>1</sup>About nine years ago I began to generate these reports in order to monitor this phenomenon. With the gracious assistance of so many people, more and more errors are edited out with each edition so that the data reported in each issue is intended to replace any inconsistent data reported in an earlier issue.

<sup>2</sup>For purposes of consistency, a juvenile crime is defined as one committed while the offender was under age eighteen, the most common age jurisdictional dividing line between juvenile and criminal courts. A juvenile death penalty is one imposed for a juvenile crime.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND:

Actual execution of such condemned juveniles began in 1642 (Thomas Graunger, Plymouth Colony, Massachusetts). In the three and one-half centuries since that time, about 350 persons have been executed for juvenile crimes. While these 350 juvenile executions were imposed by thirty-eight states and the federal government, they constitute only 1.8% of the total of about 19,000 confirmed American executions since 1608.<sup>3</sup>

Nine of these executions for juvenile crimes have been imposed during the current era (1973-1995). These nine recent executions of juvenile offenders are only 3% of the total of about 300 executions, a somewhat higher rate than had been experienced prior to 1973. The nine executions are listed in Table 1.

The periods on death row awaiting execution for these recent cases ranged from six years to nearly sixteen years. All of the juvenile offenders executed during this current era were age seventeen at the time of their crimes. The last offender executed for a crime committed at an age less than seventeen was Leonard M. Shockley (age sixteen at time of crime), executed on April 10, 1959, in Maryland.

LEGAL CONTEXT:

The constitutionality of the juvenile death penalty seems to be a reasonably well-settled issue. In Thompson v. Oklahoma, 487 U.S. 815 (1988), the Supreme Court held that executions of offenders age fifteen and younger at the time of their crimes are unconstitutional. The combined effect of the opinions by Justice Stevens and Justice O'Connor in Thompson is to hold that no state without a minimum age line in their death penalty statute can go below age sixteen without violating Thompson, and in fact no state with a minimum age line in its death penalty statute uses an age less than sixteen. In Stanford v. Kentucky, 492 U.S. 361 (1989), the Supreme Court held that the Eighth Amendment does not prohibit the death penalty for crimes committed at age sixteen or seventeen regardless of state statutory provisions.

Some rumblings of a challenge to Thompson have been heard from local prosecutors and trial court judges, but none have survived appellate court review. The Supreme Court of Louisiana held that Thompson prevents fifteen-year-old offenders from being executed in Louisiana (State v. Stone, 535 So.2d 362 (La. 1988); and Dugar v. State, 615 So.2d 1333 (La. 1993)). The same result was reached by the appellate courts in Indiana (Cooper v. State, 540 N.E.2d 1216 (Ind. 1989)) and Alabama (Flowers v. State, 586 So.2d 978 (Ala. Ct. Crim. Ap. 1991)). The Florida Supreme Court ruled that, regardless of any mandate from Thompson, the Florida Constitution's prohibition against cruel or unusual punishment forbids the execution of fifteen-year-old offenders (Allen v. State, 636 So.2d 494 (1994)).

Currently, thirty-eight states and the federal government have statutes authorizing the death penalty for certain forms of murder. Of those thirty-nine death penalty jurisdictions, fourteen (36%) have expressly chosen age eighteen at the time of the crime as the minimum age for eligibility for that ultimate punishment. Another four (10%) have chosen age seventeen as the minimum. The other twenty-one (54%) of the death penalty jurisdictions use age sixteen as the minimum age, either through an express age in the statute (nine states) or by court ruling (twelve states). Some legislative consideration of lowering the minimum age to sixteen can be detected, but it is minimal at least at this time. Table 2 on page five lists the jurisdictions in the respective minimum age categories.

JUVENILE DEATH SENTENCES IMPOSED, 1973 - JUNE 30, 1995:

The current American death penalty era began when new death penalty statutes were passed following the Supreme Court's decision in Furman v. Georgia (1972), which in effect struck down all then existing death penalty statutes. Sentencing began under the new statutes in 1973 and continues through today. Although the constitutionality of these current era statutes was not recognized formally by the Supreme Court until 1976 (Gregg v. Georgia) and actual executions did not begin until 1977, the current era of death sentencing began in 1973.

Table 3 on page seven lists the sentences imposed each year according to the Bureau of Justice Statistics and to my research. A total of 140 juvenile death sentences have been imposed since 1973, only 2.6% of the total of the about 5,434 death sentences imposed for offenders of all ages. Over two-thirds of these juvenile death sentences have been imposed on seventeen-year-old offenders, the other third on offenders ages sixteen and fifteen, and none on offenders age fourteen or younger at the time of their crimes.

The rate of juvenile death sentencing fluctuated considerably in the early years of this current era but then settled into a consistent annual rate of about 2% of total death sentences in the mid-1980s. A change occurred from 1987 to 1989 when the juvenile death sentencing rate dropped considerably, presumably deterred by the cases then pending before the United States Supreme Court. In the 1990s, the rate appears to have returned to the previous pattern -- an annual rate of about 2% or 3% of all death sentences.

Of these 140 juvenile death sentences imposed in the current era, only forty-two (30%) remain currently in force (see Table 5 on page ten). Nine (6%) have resulted in execution, and eighty-nine (64%) have been reversed. Thus, for the ninety-eight juvenile death sentences finally resolved (excluding the forty-two death row inmates remaining under juvenile death sentences but still litigating them), the reversal rate is 91% (89/98).

These 140 juvenile death sentences have been imposed upon 128 different juvenile offenders in twenty-two individual states. These twenty-two states comprise well over half of the death penalty jurisdictions during this time period. Table 4 on page eight lists all death penalty jurisdictions which have imposed juvenile death sentences since 1973.

Texas and Florida are clear leaders in this practice, each having imposed at least twice as many juvenile death sentences as any of the other jurisdictions. Only seven of these states have imposed more than five such sentences. Juvenile death sentences for black and white juvenile offenders appear to be spread around the sentencing jurisdictions fairly evenly, but the thirteen Hispanic/Latino offenders are all in Texas, Arizona and Nevada. Of those jurisdictions with more than a minimal number of juvenile death sentences, all seven Louisiana cases involved black offenders and all five Oklahoma cases involved white offenders.

Almost all juvenile offenders sentenced to death were males. The four cases involving female juveniles were in the deep south (Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia) and in Indiana. The thirteen very young offenders (age fifteen at crime) were scattered across ten different states.

Appendix A to this report (pp. 11-15) provides a more detailed listing of name, age, race, gender, state, and current status for each juvenile death sentence.<sup>5</sup>

CURRENT DEATH ROW INMATES UNDER JUVENILE DEATH SENTENCES

As of June 30, 1995, forty-two persons were on death row under death sentences received for juvenile crimes. These forty-two condemned juveniles constituted just over 1% of the total death row population of about 3,000. Although all were age seventeen or younger at the time of their crimes, their current ages range from eighteen to thirty-six. They were under death sentences in twelve different states and had been on death row from a few weeks to over sixteen years. Texas has by far the largest death row for juvenile offenders, now holding seventeen (40%) of the national total of forty-two juvenile offenders.

All forty-two juvenile offenders on death row were male and had been convicted and sentenced to death for murder. The demographic characteristics of these forty-two juveniles and their fifty-three victims are outlined in Table 5 on page ten.

Over three-quarters of these cases involved seventeen-year-old offenders, and two-thirds of them were minority offenders. In contrast, 79% of the victims were adults. Well over half of the victims were white, and about half were females. The paradigm case of the juvenile offender on death row is that of the seventeen-year-old African-American or Hispanic male whose victim is a white adult.

The total number of persons under death sentences has increased by 148% in the past decade, following a steady rise from 1,209 in 1983 to about 3,000 in 1995. In contrast, the number of juvenile offenders under death sentences has remained fairly constant. Thirty-three juvenile offenders were under death sentences at the close of 1983, compared to forty-two juvenile offenders today (a 27% increase), but this number has fluctuated back and forth between these two extremes during this decade. This fairly constant death row population for juvenile offenders results from the fact that the number of new death sentences each year is roughly equal to the combination of death sentence reversals plus executions for juvenile offenders.

<sup>5</sup>The primary and most reliable sources for these data concerning recent death sentences are the outstanding data-gathering effort of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, Inc. (particularly their Death Row, U.S.A.) and the equally fine monitoring effort of the National Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty.
