Introduction

In January 2016, the National Institute of Justice (NIJ) funded a project entitled A Macromorphoscopic Databank: Establishing the Statistical Analysis of Macromorphoscopic Data in Forensic Anthropology (Award No. NIJ 2015-DN-BX-K012). The goal of this project was to develop a large reference dataset of cranial macromorphoscopic (MMS) trait data to improve ancestry estimations for unidentified human skeletal remains in forensic contexts using cranial morphological features. While craniometric analyses are widely used in ancestry estimation, MMS traits did not yet have the empirical support needed for use in a court of law. This project addresses this gap in best practice through creation of the Macromorphoscopic Databank (MaMD), which houses MMS trait data from skeletal collections around the world, in an effort to capture patterns of human variation in MMS trait expression and to create a more informed and refined model for ancestry estimation. This project is an important contribution to forensic anthropology, quantifying ancestry estimations when using MMS data.

Project Purpose

When using the traditional cranial nonmetric methods of ancestry estimation, forensic anthropologists rely on subjective trait lists that require expert-level observer experience and unquantifiable visual assessment of cranial morphology. Prior to this study, there were no empirically-supported methodologies for estimating ancestry using MMS traits beyond simple methods of analysis that worked for only two or three groups (Hefner and Ousley 2014). Unlike craniometric methods of analysis, MMS traits were not subjected to the same levels of statistical rigor, in part due to difficulties encountered when working with categorical rather than continuous data, but also because appropriate samples were not available for their quantification. Moreover, forensic anthropologists have not necessarily felt the need to quantify this traditional and seemingly effective method (Klepinger 2006), even though estimating ancestry using the morphology found in human skeletal remains is a challenging component of the biological profile (i.e., determination of age, sex, ancestry, and stature).

The lack of appropriate reference data for macromorphoscopic traits with large sample sizes from multiple populations did not permit establishing error rates for the traditional method or the quantification of expert judgment. In light of the Daubert decision (U.S. Supreme Court, 1993) and other federal court rulings guiding judges on the evaluation of expert witness testimony, the methods used to establish the biological profile in forensic anthropology require (1) empirical support, (2) estimated error rates, (3) method standardization, and (4) validation of the method through the peer review process. The final component of the Daubert guidelines—general acceptance—has been met by MMS traits; however, such acceptance without validation is unfortunate and represents a gap in best practice. Therefore, the purpose of this research was to establish a large reference database containing data from multiple samples that could be used to quantify macromorphoscopic trait analysis in ancestry estimation.

Project Design and Methods

Project Design

This project is based on three premises, which, when combined, create an easy, standardized method for ancestry estimation using cranial MMS traits. This approach 1) provides a standardized method of data collection; 2) produces known rates of accuracy and reliability; 3) satisfies admissibility requirements in court, and; 4) provides end-users a method of analysis that does not rely solely on expertise.

Premise 1: Macromorphoscopic Traits

The range in variation of macromorphoscopic traits within and between populations is much greater than previously recognized, but the variation between populations can be modeled probabilistically.

Premise 2: Macromorphoscopic Databank

While data sources are available that are appropriate for forensic anthropological investigations, a single, readily available data source is needed. This databank should incorporate historic data from skeletal collections around the world with modern case file data from forensic anthropology laboratories and medical examiner offices. Such a repository provides the necessary reference dataset for probabilistic modeling.

Premise 3: Program Development

Once collected and centrally-stored, macromorphoscopic trait data from these skeletal collections, forensic anthropology laboratories, and medical examiner offices can be used to develop probabilistic models for ancestry estimation. An end-user friendly program to estimate the ancestry of an unknown individual is the necessary next step. Such a program would provide the correct classification, in addition to the associated measures of likelihood to include error rates, probabilities, and other classification outputs needed to report results.

Data Collection Methods

Seventeen MMS traits were collected over the course of the project (Table 1). All data were collected using MMS (v 1.61) and were directly added to a relational database.

Macromorphoscopic Traits (v1.61; Hefner 2018), is software created by Stephen D. Ousley that provides instructions and user guidelines for all 17 cranial macromorphoscopic traits. In addition to detailed descriptions and definitions of each trait, line drawings assist the user in selecting an appropriate character state. Macromorphoscopic traits take the following possible values: (1) binary variables, scored 0-1 (for example, PBD); (2) nominal variables, scored 1-2-3 (for example, ZS), and; (3) ordinal variables, scored 1>2>3 (for example, IOB). Data collection was limited by the age of the individual (e.g., subadult versus adult) and the condition of the remains (e.g., fragmented, taphonomic damage). Only those individuals with known biological parameters were selected for analysis.

To maximize efforts, data were collected through: a) skeletal collections; 2) outside researchers; and 3) partnerships with forensic laboratories. Data collection targeted specific skeletal reference collections to increase sample sizes of underrepresented groups and to maximize populations most frequently encountered in forensic anthropological laboratories.

Data were collected from 10 national and international collections. These collections include: Robert J. Terry Collection, National Museum of Natural History, Washington, D.C.; William Bass Donated Collection at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tennessee; Operation Identification Skeletal Collection and the Texas State Donated Collection, Texas State University, San Marcos, Texas; Osteological Reference Collection, University of Antioquia, Medellin, Colombia; Maxwell Museum Documented Skeletal Collection, University of New Mexico, Albuquerque, New Mexico; Khon Kaen University Osteological Collection, Khon Kaen University, Khon Kaen, Thailand; Osteological Collection, The Museum of London, London, England; Osteological Collection, British Natural History Museum, London, England; unidentified migrant remains, Pima County Office of the Medical Examiner Tucson, Arizona; Repatriation Office, Smithsonian Institution, Washington D.C.

Seven researchers also contributed data to the Macromorphoscopic Databank (MaMD). Individual contributors submitted data from: Medieval Nubian Collection, Michigan State University, East Lansing, Michigan; Museum of Archaeology and Anthropology, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Smithsonian Institution, National Museum of Natural History, Washington, D.C.; Documented Collection, Maxwell Museum of Anthropology, Albuquerque, New Mexico; Pima County Office of the Medical Examiner, Tucson, Arizona; William M. Bass Donated Skeletal Collection, Knoxville, Tennessee; Texas State Donated Skeletal Collection, San Marcos, Texas; Hamann-Todd Osteological Collection, Cleveland Museum of Natural History, Cleveland, Ohio; and, Peruvian osteological sample, Peru. Of particular note here is the sample of over 4000 individuals contributed by the National Museum of Natural History, Repatriation Laboratory, in Washington, D.C. Those data will serve as a unique reference dataset for Native American groups in the MaMD.

Forensic anthropologists at PCOME underwent a training period with the PI in learning data collection techniques with MMS (v1.61), a computer program developed for the collection of MMS trait data. Now implemented in their casework, the PCOME regularly submit data to the MaMD.

Structure and Content of the Data

The MaMD currently houses data for approximately 8,465 individuals from numerous geographic regions (Appendix 2). Appendix 3 provides sample sizes for each group. The MaMD currently comprises four data tables (demographic and trait scores) for the modern world-wide sample and a prehistoric Amerindian sample. The data tables contain scores for all 17 cranial macromorphoscopic traits largely following the definitions provided by Hefner (2009, 2015) and Hefner and Linde (2018). The demographic data table includes the following variables [discussed in greater detail in Hefner (2018)] for each individual: 3-group ancestry, ancestry (geographic), peer-perceived ancestry (US-designation), geographic origin (place of birth), tribe (for Amerindian sample, only), age-at-death, sex, and, birth year. Tables illustrating trait frequency data, by sample, generated during this research are provided in Appendix 1.

Findings

Tangible deliverables, rather than data driven findings, constitute the majority of outputs for this research period. These deliverables include publications, public presentations, workshops, and data collection, storage, and analytical tools (i.e., MMS software and the Macromorphoscopic Databank).

Presentations, Publications, and Workshops

This project resulted in eleven publications and six presentations presented to national and international audiences. These presentations and publications informed a wide audience about the MMS software and the MaMD, and explored the accuracy and reliability of the reference data collected during this project. Publications have appeared in a range of contexts, including a complete monograph, various book chapters, and peer-reviewed journal articles. One of the book chapters will be published in Spanish and focus on Hispanic data in the MaMD, reaching a Latin American audience, with implications for collaborative research and data collection. Peer-reviewed journal articles were published in numerous journals including: American Journal of Physical Anthropology, Journal of Forensic Sciences, Journal of Archaeological Science, Forensic Anthropology, Forensic Science International, and Academic Forensic Pathology. Through these publications, the project engaged pathologists, archaeologists, biological anthropologists (primatologists, forensic anthropologists, and bioarchaeologists), and the forensic community at-large (domestic and international). An additional article, exploring the impacts of age and sex on MMS trait expression, is in preparation for submission to Forensic Science International. The most notable publication was the Atlas of Human Cranial Macromorphoscopic Traits (Hefner and Linde 2018). This monograph presents the historical progression and anatomical development of all 17 traits, including explanations of each possible character state and depictions to ensure their proper collection.

Public presentations and invited lectures were delivered at national and international conferences, including the 69th and 70th American Academy of Forensic Sciences, the 87th American Association of Physical Anthropologists, the International Association Craniofacial Identification, and the Forests, Lakes, and Grasslands regional meeting. Detailed information for each publication and presentation is provided under Dissemination of Research Findings.

Two formal workshops for national and international audiences were also provided. A workshop provided at Khon Kaen University for students, professors, and curators provided the audience training in the assessment of MMS traits and the MMS software. An additional full-day workshop was held at the 70th American Academy of Forensic Sciences annual meeting in Seattle, WA for professionals in forensic anthropology with a range of experience in ancestry estimation. Detailed workshop information is provided under Dissemination of Research Findings.

Implications for Criminal Justice Policy and Practice in the United States

Craniometric reference data are already available for a large number of the populations frequently encountered in contemporary forensic anthropological casework. While macromorphoscopic data has not been ignored, those data have not yet seen the meteoric rise in research that their metric counterparts have, despite continued use of these traits and demonstrations of their classificatory power beyond the 3-group model. Thus, the MaMD will be an important tool for reference data during casework; and most importantly, as more data are added to the MaMD, it will better serve as a central repository containing data for appropriate reference populations encountered in forensic anthropological investigations.

The MaMD will continue to grow as more data are collected or when new traits are identified and included for additional study. To function wholly as a data collection repository and as an analytical tool for future work, the MaMD will require increased cooperation and data sharing among researchers in both forensic anthropology and more generally among forensic scientists. Future efforts have great potential for producing more refined estimates of geographic origin, including among juveniles. These efforts will best be employed in a software package similar in scope and function to Fordisc (Jantz and Ousley 2005) or as a stand-alone software package with an analytical component. In the end, the success of the MaMD depends on research collaboration, data sharing, and standardized data collection strategies with a determined focus on cultivating the databank.
