FOREWORD

As the Department of Justice’s largest grantmaking division, the Office of Justice Programs is a leading source of federal funding, training and technical assistance, statistics and research for safety and justice at the state, local and tribal levels. Each year, OJP invests roughly $5 billion to meet the most pressing challenges facing our nation’s criminal and juvenile justice systems and the communities they serve.

The OJP Fiscal Year 2023–2027 Policy Blueprint is both a statement of values and a roadmap for the design and development of our policies and programs in the years to come. It frames our mission around three overarching priorities: advancing community safety, building community trust, and strengthening the community’s role as co-producer of safety and justice. These aims have always been central to our work, but we are reaffirming and reinforcing our commitment to building community capacity and to supporting communities as partners to justice system actors in catalyzing meaningful and lasting change.

To deliver on our mission, we are focused on six goals: promoting safety and strengthening trust, accelerating justice system reforms, making the juvenile justice system more equitable and effective, expanding access to victim services, advancing science and innovation, and achieving organizational excellence across the agency. These goals, as well as the corresponding objectives described in the following pages, are a clear reflection of OJP’s vision for improving public safety and ensuring equal justice for all.

The agenda outlined in this blueprint is ambitious, yet it is within our reach. Through the dedication of OJP’s talented workforce and our invaluable partners in the field, we can create a safer, more just, more equitable nation for all.

Assistant Attorney General

TAGLINE

Building Solutions | Supporting Communities | Advancing Justice

The Office of Justice Programs is the largest grantmaking component of the Department of Justice and houses the Department's criminal and juvenile justice-related science, statistics, and programmatic agencies. OJP provides federal leadership, funding, training and technical assistance, research and statistics, and other critical resources to advance work that strengthens community safety, promotes civil rights and racial equity, increases access to justice, supports crime victims and individuals impacted by the justice system, and builds trust between law enforcement and communities.

OJP administers a broad range of programs that contribute to all five of the Department's fiscal year 2022–2026 strategic goals.¹ Given the agency's focus on assisting state, local and tribal criminal and juvenile justice systems, OJP's programs particularly contribute to efforts to implement DOJ Strategic Goal 2: Keep Our Country Safe and Goal 3: Protect Civil Rights.

The six goals described below span OJP's wide-reaching portfolio of resources designed to build solutions that support community safety and advance justice. All of OJP's goals and strategic objectives will be infused with a culture and practice of data collection, research, and evaluation to ensure that science is interwoven throughout the mission and practice of OJP.
